

Gorbachev reassures Bush on ties

MOSCOW (R) — Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev personally reassured U.S. President George Bush Saturday that he was committed to good relations between the superpowers and to democratic reform of his country. The official Soviet News Agency TASS said the two presidents had a long telephone conversation which also covered Middle East peace efforts, disarmament and their coming meeting in Moscow. "Its significance was above all that they confirmed their commitment to a common course for improving Soviet-U.S. relations," TASS said. "Gorbachev said that as long as it was reciprocated, his choice in this matter was just as unaltered as his choice for a fundamental democratic transformation of the Soviet state."

Jordan Times

An independent Arab political daily published by the Jordan Press Foundation
جوردان تايمز يومية سياسية تصدر بالانجليزية عن المؤسسة الصحفية الأردنية «الواي»

Volume 16 Number 4697

AMMAN SUNDAY, MAY 12, 1991, SHAWAL 28, 1411

Price: Jordan 100 fils; Saudi Arabia 1.50 riyals; UAE 1.50 dirhams

Iraq resumes foreign mail service

BAGHDAD (R) — Iraq Saturday said it had resumed an international postal service for the first time since the start of the Gulf crisis last August. An official statement said the service would operate three times a week. With no flights leaving Iraq, mail would be taken by road to Jordan and forwarded to other countries aboard Royal Jordanian airlines, the statement said.

Fateh adds two to Central Committee

TUNIS (R) — Fateh, the main group in the Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO), has added two leading moderates to its Central Committee, the body which runs the movement's day-to-day affairs. They are Nabil Shant, a diplomatic adviser to PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat, and Abdullah Frangi, who has been the head of the PLO mission in Bonn. Both are accomplished diplomats on the liberal wing of the organisation. They were coopted during a three-day meeting of Fateh's 106-seat Revolutionary Council which ended in Tunis Friday evening, PLO sources said Saturday.

Kuwaitis return home

KUWAIT (R) — Hundreds of Kuwaitis returned home on Saturday at the start of a government airlift of 400,000 citizens who either fled or were abroad when Iraq invaded nine months ago. "There is no place like home, no place. And there is no better feeling than returning home," Abdullah Kassein, holding his child, said as he left the war-torn airport after a brief flight from Bahrain. He was among the men, women and children aboard the first of hundreds of Kuwait Airways flights that will repatriate Kuwaitis — free of charge — more than 10 weeks after the end of the Gulf war.

Kennedy nephew surrenders to police

PALESTINE BEACH (AP) — William Kennedy Smith surrendered to Palm Beach police Saturday on charges of rape and battery. "I'd like to make a statement, but I want to take care of this process first," Mr. Smith said as he arrived. His mother, Jean Kennedy Smith, was at his side. Mr. Smith, 30-year-old nephew of Sen. Edward Kennedy, was charged Thursday with sexual battery — tantamount to rape — and with battery in connection with an incident March 30 at the Kennedy family's oceanfront estate. He has denied any wrong doing.

Bessmertnykh visits Lebanon on Tuesday

BEIRUT (R) — Soviet Foreign Minister Alexander Bessmertnykh will visit Lebanon next Tuesday as part of his current Middle East tour, government sources said. The sources said the Soviet ambassador to Lebanon, Gennadiy Dichev, informed Lebanese Foreign Ministry Secretary-General Saïd Chammass of the visit. It would be the first visit by a Soviet foreign minister since the start of the civil war in 1975.

FAO to monitor pest spraying in Iraq

ROME (AP) — The United Nations Food and Agriculture Organisation (FAO) will monitor aerial spraying of sun-pests threatening food crops in northern Iraq. The U.N. agency said it will supply the Iraqi government with six specialised Polish pilots and two mechanics. Iraq will supply Mi-2 agricultural helicopters, equipment and supplies which will spray endangered wheat and barley crops in areas north of the 36th parallel. FAO said Iraq will be permitted to fly over the northern part of the country on condition that the operation is done under FAO supervision and that the pilots are international and civilian.

Peace process in crucial phase

Baker in Damascus; Syria says Arabs will insist on their rights

DAMASCUS (Agencies) — U.S. Secretary of State James Baker arrived in Damascus Saturday at the start of his fourth Middle East tour in search of a settlement to the Arab-Israeli conflict.

He was met on arrival by Foreign Minister Farouk Al-Sabara and will have talks with President Hafez Al-Assad Sunday before going to Cairo.

En route to Syria, Mr. Baker said Saudi Arabia and its five Arab partners in the Cooperation Council (GCC) will break a "major taboo" and negotiate directly with Israel if there is a Mideast peace conference.

But Mr. Baker said the Gulf conflict's participation would be limited to such side issues as water resources and to sending an observer to the opening of the peace conference.

Even so, Mr. Baker hailed the announcement, which culminated two weeks of quiet diplomacy by the Bush administration.

Mr. Baker learned of the GCC states' willingness to participate in the peace process from Saudi Ambassador Prince Bandar Ben Sultan just before leaving for Syria, the Washington Post reported in Saturday's editions.

An administration official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Mr. Baker hoped the move would influence Israel and Syria to compromise their differences over a formula for holding peace talks.

But the official acknowledged: "I don't know whether it will or not."

Mr. Baker is visiting Syria.

Egypt, Jordan and Israel over six days to try to get agreement on how much of a role outsiders might play in the negotiations and which Palestinian Arabs could attend.

It could be his last such attempt.

"At some point you stop flying around," the official said.

The official also disclosed Mr. Baker had tried to work out a deal in which the Arabs would suspend their economic boycott of Israel in exchange for a halt to the construction of Jewish settlements on the occupied territories.

"We haven't gotten anything from either side," the official said.

Ahead of what could be crucial talks with Mr. Baker, Syria said Saturday that Arabs wanted a just and comprehensive Middle East peace but would not abandon their rights and lands.

A senior Syrian official told Reuters in an interview that Damascus was ready to cooperate with the international efforts to solve the Arab-Israeli conflict but insisted on implementation of relevant U.N. resolutions.

The official said: "Nothing should prevent the U.N. Security Council adopting appropriate measures to enforce its decisions if Israel continues to foil the current peace efforts."

"Nobody should expect Syria or the Arabs to abandon their rights and lands or submit to Israel's expansionist policies," he said.

He said President Assad affirmed during recent talks with Mr. Baker and Soviet Foreign Minister Alexander Bessmertnykh that "Syria was keen to see a just and comprehensive peace based on U.N. Resolutions especially 242 and 338".

"President Assad also affirmed Syria's readiness to cooperate with international efforts aimed at enforcing international law and adopting the same standards in dealing with hot problems in the region and the world."

This was a reference to enforcing U.N. resolutions on Iraq's occupation of Kuwait last August. Syria wants resolutions against Israel to be pursued with the same vigour.

The official said peace efforts so far "are not satisfactory because of Israel's refusal to accept U.N. resolutions calling for withdrawal from occupied Arab lands and endorsing Palestinian rights."

The Syrian official said Israel was ignoring world condemnation of settlements and continuing to put more settlers on Arab territories.

"Firm information shows that there are now over 220,000 Jewish settlers in the West Bank," the official said.

"No wise person in the world would expect Arabs to abandon their lands and submit to Israel's obstinacy," he said.

"U.N. resolutions are clear. They condemn settlements, call for annexation and call for Israeli withdrawal from occupied Arab lands in return for peace. There is no alternative for enforcement of these resolutions."

Kurdish autonomy pact expected within 2 days

BAGHDAD (Agencies) — Iraqi President Saddam Hussein met Kurdish rebel leader Massoud Barzani Saturday for the second time since Baghdad began talks with heads of the country's restive Kurdish people.

A Kurdish newspaper said talks between Baghdad and the Kurds on a new autonomy pact could end with an agreement within two days.

The Iraqi News Agency (INA) said President Saddam met Mr. Barzani at noon but gave no other details about the talks, which have been shrouded in secrecy since they began last Tuesday.

President Saddam and Mr. Barzani, head of the Kurdish Democratic Party (KDP) and leader of a four-man Kurdish delegation, held their first meeting last Wednesday.

The Al Iraq newspaper, breaking days of official silence on the talks, said negotiations were going ahead "in an objective spirit" and the discussions were "full and frank."

"The result of the negotiations is expected to be announced in a couple of days in the framework of a mutual agreement on how to implement the March (1970) declaration which will strengthen national unity," it said in a front-page commentary.

It gave no other details. The four-member Kurdish delegation has been in Baghdad since early this week to work out a new autonomy deal for the Iraqi Kurds, who make up about one fifth of Iraq's 18 million people.

An agreement satisfactory to the Kurds could help persuade hundreds of thousands of Kurdish refugees to come home from the mountains on Iraq's borders with Turkey and Iran.

A pact could also undermine the justification for a Western military presence in the Kurdish areas of northern Iraq.

Both sides have described the atmosphere at the talks as positive. The Wednesday's meeting was interpreted as a promising sign.

But other information has been scanty. Kurdish delegates have said very little.

Before the talks opened, Kurds in exile said the delegation wanted international guarantees for any new accord with the Iraqi government.

They also want access to oil revenues from the oilfields around the northern city of Kirkuk, where Kurds traditionally made up a majority of the population.

Iraqi officials have indicated they have reservations about making these concessions.

A first round of talks two weeks ago led to agreement in principle to revive the 1970 accord, which recognised the Kurds as a distinct nation and gave them extensive rights to run their own local affairs.

Kurdish rebels allege Baghdad reneged on the 1970 bargain.

Last month, Mr. Barzani sent his younger brother, Idris, to the talks, which were led by Jalal Talabani. Mr. Talabani leads the second-largest rebel faction, the Patriotic Union of Kurdistan.

After the April 24 session with President Saddam, Mr. Talabani said there was agreement "in principle" to stop the Kurdish rebellion in exchange for full autonomy for Iraq's 3.5 million Kurds.

Although the Kurds say the government had reneged on previous agreements on the subject, Mr. Talabani said that in 21 years of dealing with Baghdad, this was the first time that he felt a serious agreement was possible.

However, Mr. Barzani demanded that the U.N. security council's permanent members — the United States, Britain, France, China and the Soviet Union — guarantee any agreement that might be reached with Baghdad.

Allied operation

Allied troops meanwhile loaded Iraqi Kurds onto scores of trucks and buses to begin Operation Gallant Provider, an effort aimed at repatriating an estimated 200,000 refugees remaining in the mountains bordering Turkey.

Allied officials, meanwhile, expected an Iraqi response Saturday.

day to their proposal to make a demilitarised zone out of an Iraqi provincial capital that is crucial to the resettlement, since it is home to 100,000 of the exiled Kurds.

Iraq and the allies have spent a week forging a compromise over security in Dohuk, which Kurds have deserted.

The refugees fled their homes in March to escape the Kurdish rebellion in the wake of the Gulf war.

In an effort to avoid a confrontation and speed the withdrawal of the 10,000 U.S. soldiers protecting the Kurds, Secretary of State James Baker said Friday that the United States may ask the U.N. Security Council to authorise a police force in the area despite Iraq's objections (See page 2).

To begin Operation Gallant Provider, allied soldiers put refugees on trucks and buses Saturday at a way station near two of the largest Turkish refugee camps, hoping others will also be inspired to return, officials said.

"The movement of the trucks themselves will be a catalytic factor," said Joseph Farmer, a spokesman for the U.S. forces.

The buses and trucks were leaving from Kanimasi, an allied way-station near the Turkish-Iraqi border, one of nine such stations where refugees can find a lift and necessary medical care and food.

U.S. "warning"

The United States Friday said Iraq should reconsider its opposition to a United Nations police force to protect the refugees and renewed its warning that a failure to do so could prolong international economic sanctions.

State Department deputy spokesman Richard Boucher said the United States was concerned about "Iraqi intransigence on security for displaced-persons camps in northern Iraq" as described by U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar in talks with President George Bush on Thursday.

"That means we think that the

(Continued on page 5)

King, Joxe review Mideast, bilateral ties

AMMAN (J.T.) — His Majesty King Hussein received Saturday at Al-Nadwa Palace French Defence Minister Pierre Joxe and discussed with him the current situation in the area and Jordanian-French relations.

The audience was attended by Prime Minister Mudar Badran, Royal Court Chief Sharif Zeid Ben Shaker, the King's military secretary and French Ambassador in Amman Denis Bouchard.

Mr. Joxe was received upon arrival by Armed Forces Chief of Staff General Fathi Abu Taleh, several of his assistants, the commander of the Royal Jordanian Air Force, Ambassador Bouchard and the French military attaché in Amman.

Gen. Abu Taleh welcomed the French minister and expressed hope that his talks in Amman will be fruitful and will have positive results on the bilateral relations.

Mr. Joxe expressed satisfaction over the visit, his first to Jordan.

Mr. Joxe will also be received by His Royal Highness Crown Prince Hassan for post-Gulf war cooperation talks.

Mr. Joxe, appointed defence minister in January, is expected to hold a press conference on Sunday.

Reuter adds: Mr. Joxe arrived from the United Arab Emirates a day after an unidentified person threw a "very primitive kind of a Molotov cocktail in a little bottle" at the back gate of the French embassy in Amman, one source said. No one was injured and no damage was caused.

The sources said they suspected that Muslim fundamentalists, angry at French participation in the coalition that fought Iraq, could have been behind the attack.

During the Gulf war, arsonists set the French Cultural Centre on fire.

Chief of Staff Fathi Abu Taleh Saturday receives French Defence Minister Pierre Joxe upon his arrival at Amman Airport.

GCC states to join talks with Israel

LUXEMBOURG (Agencies) — The Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC), welcoming U.S. Secretary of State James Baker's bid to bring Arabs and Israelis to the negotiating table, said Saturday it will join a Middle East peace conference to give an "impetus to the peace process."

Qatar's foreign minister, Mubarak Ben Ali Al-Khater, said the six-member GCC "supports the serious attempts being made to find a lasting solution" to the Arab-Israeli conflict.

"GCC participation seeks to give an impetus to the peace process," said Mr. Khater.

Qatar holds the presidency of the GCC which also comprises Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Oman, Bahrain and the United Arab Emirates.

As he returned to the Middle East Saturday, Mr. Baker said the GCC states will negotiate directly with Israel in a Middle East peace conference on such side issues as arms control and water resources.

Mr. Khater confirmed this and the GCC's agreement to send an observer to the conference's opening session.

"In realisation of the efforts of Mr. Baker (the GCC) has expressed its readiness to participate in the conference as an

(Continued on page 5)

Bessmertnykh voices cautious optimism

CAIRO (Agencies) — Soviet Foreign Minister Alexander Bessmertnykh expressed cautious optimism Saturday but warned that failure to arrange a Middle East peace conference would lead to "terrible tragedy."

And despite difficulties, he said, the Soviet Union and the United States are moving together, slowly, towards organising one.

The Soviet minister and his American counterpart, Secretary of State James Baker, who arrives in Cairo Sunday night, have two meetings scheduled in the Egyptian capital on co-sponsoring Israeli-Arab peace negotiations.

On Monday, Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak is their host at a working lunch on the proposed conference. Mr. Bessmertnykh spent more than two hours with Mr. Mubarak on Saturday before speaking to reporters.

"There is a chance. There is a hope," said Mr. Bessmertnykh. "And if we work further and if we have agreement of all the parties, then the chance will materialise."

"If it does not materialise — and we can see the alternative — I think it will be a terrible tragedy."

Mr. Bessmertnykh's assessment was based on talks with leaders of four countries he has visited since last Wednesday, Syria, Jordan, Israel and Egypt.

"My optimism is natural, but I am very cautious about saying that (a conference) will definitely materialise. There are problems and difficulties," he said in English.

"We are at the start of a process together with the United States. We are moving. Maybe slowly, but we are moving. ... I can't tell you that we are going to have a conference, but we hope we shall."

Mr. Bessmertnykh gave no details of difficulties obstructing the peacemaking process.

The Soviet Union and the United States have agreed to co-sponsor the conference but important details, such as the U.N. role and Palestinian representation, are still in dispute.

Mr. Bessmertnykh, the first senior Soviet official to visit Israel since Moscow severed ties in 1967, angered Israelis this week by refusing to rule out restrictions on Soviet Jewish emigration unless Israel stopped building new settlements.

Washington and Moscow have both said the new Jewish settlements in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip are an obstacle to peace.

But shortly after Mr. Bessmertnykh left for Cairo, Israeli television reported a government drive to link the settlements with Israel proper (see page 2).

About 250,000 Soviet Jews

(Continued on page 5)

Disaster alert as fresh cyclone nears Bangladesh

DHAKA (R) — A new cyclone headed towards Bangladesh Saturday as the calamity-torn nation struggled to cope with devastation from last week's cyclone and a series of floods and rain-storms.

Dhaka weather office said it located a low depression in the Andaman Sea, 1,280 kilometres south of Chittagong, which "may or may not" hit the Bangladesh coast.

Officials said the cyclone which ripped through the low-lying Asian state on April 29 came from the same area.

"We don't want to take any chances. We have told people to stay alert," said Abdur Rub Khan, a senior official in Chittagong.

Altogether 138,868 people were killed by the 280 kilometre-per-hour cyclone and a six-metre tidal wave, according to current figures, but Red Cross officials said the final toll could be 200,000.

Information Secretary Manzura-Mowla said the cyclone destroyed 3,000 tonnes of standing crop over 738,000 hectares of agricultural land.

Another official said floods engulfed at least 520 square kilometres of area in northeast Sylhet and Moulvi Bazar districts when six rivers burst their banks following heavy rains. Huge rice fields and thousands of homes were inundated.

Relief aid continued to arrive but disease threatened millions of survivors of last week's worst cyclone in the nation's 20-year history.

Prime Minister Begum Khaleda Zia, who returned to Dhaka on Friday after touring disaster areas for three days, warned against misuse of foreign relief.

She also said she was shifting her office to Chittagong to supervise relief work more closely.

Voluntary agencies said diarrhoea had broken out in 16 coastal districts where people were drinking contaminated water. The government said it was sending more doctors to the area.

Bangladesh's health directorate said diarrhoea had killed 951 people in 23 districts in the past two weeks. Most of the deaths, it said, were in cyclone-affected regions.

Storms with 100 kph winds battered seven towns in northern and eastern Bangladesh on Thursday night, destroying hundreds of mud houses and uprooting trees and electric pylons.

The floods in the northeast marooned more than 305,000 people. Officials said Moulvi Bazar town, with a population of half a million, would be submerged by waters from the Manu River if there was more rain.

Dhaka weather office said rivers all over the country would continue to rise in next 24 hours because of heavy rains in the upper Himalayan region in the north.

Perez de Cuellar: No U.N. force without council okay

UNITED NATIONS (R) — U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar said Friday that sending armed U.N. police to Iraq to protect Kurdish refugees would require Security Council action, whether or not Baghdad opposed the force.

"In this case of the police presence, I cannot do it without the consent of the Iraqis and they have rejected it," he told reporters. "For (me) to send any military presence a Security Council resolution is needed."

Mr. Perez de Cuellar indicated Resolution 688 on aid to Kurdish refugees was not sufficient to mandate an armed U.N. police force, whether Baghdad agreed to one or not.

"I am not entitled as secretary-general to send any armed personnel to any region without the consent of the Security Council," he said. "As secretary-general of the United Nations I know what we can do and what we cannot do."

Resolution 688 is often cited by U.S. British officials as authorization for the allied troops setting up "safe havens" in Iraq to aid Kurdish refugees as well as for a U.N. police force. U.N. legal experts have disagreed with both interpretations.

But the U.N. chief urged "patience," saying there was a possibility the council still could set up an operation in northern Iraq.

"The U.S. could explore another way, together with the French and British," he said without explaining further.

Allied ambassadors have been reluctant to impose a U.N. police force on Iraq through a resolution because of reservations by the Soviet Union and China. But they expect these would be removed if Iraq consented to the force.

In Washington, State Department deputy spokesman Richard Boucher said the United States wanted Iraq to reconsider its rejection of the U.N. police force idea.

He said U.N. Ambassador Thomas Pickering met with Iraqi envoy Abdul Amir Al Anbary to explain "the importance of Iraqi cooperation with the United Nations in this effort."

U.S. officials were hoping Mr. Perez de Cuellar's envoy for refugees in the region, Prince Sadruddin Aga Khan, would persuade them to at least accept U.N. police protection for international relief workers. He is meeting with Iraqi officials at the weekend.

"It doesn't really protect the Kurds enough but perhaps with enough international U.N. people on the scene their presence would do the trick," one U.S. official said. If so, a resolution or acceptance by council members would not be difficult.

The secretary-general was also asked if the United Nations, which is to take over the allied refugee camps, could ensure the safety of the Kurds without a police force.

"The real problem is that we want the Kurds to go to their homes, their houses and their villages," he said, adding that some believed they would not feel secure without a military presence.

"The United Nations is prepared to do everything, as we are doing everything, in order to protect them and to help them. But if they don't consider that the U.N. civilian presence is enough, what can we do?" he asked.

Secretary of States James Baker said Friday the United States would be willing to seek Security Council authorization if that is the only way to get a U.N. police force to protect Kurdish refugees.

He said the United States was committed to relinquishing as soon as possible to international relief and humanitarian groups the protective role now played by American troops in northern Iraq.

"If the only way that is going to happen... is through the mechanism of another resolution by the U.N. Security Council, I think we should seek another resolution of the U.N. Security Council," he told reporters after talks with German Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher.

Mashat says he retired to Canada

TORONTO (AP) — A former Iraqi ambassador to the United States, whose immigration to Canada has caused a furor, said he had doubts about Iraqi policies and decided to leave when the political "situation got so hot."

But Mohammad Al Mashat, 60, said Friday he was not threatened and was just looking for a place to retire.

He also told the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation he did not know anything about the "internal politics" surrounding the granting of permanent resident status March 27.

Immigration Minister Bernard Valcourt, meanwhile, announced Friday in Winnipeg that officials would work through the weekend to trace how the residency was granted without the knowledge of senior officials.

The department's findings will be made public Tuesday, he said.

Political opponents have criticised Prime Minister Brian Mulroney's government for the decision, saying an ambassador of Iraq should not have been accepted so easily.

Mr. Mashat, who was frequently seen on U.S. television defending Iraq's takeover of Kuwait in the days before the outbreak of war, was awarded resident status as a financially independent retiree.

In the interview on Friday, he was asked if the reason he'd decided not to return to Iraq when recalled by Baghdad in mid-January just before the war was that he was afraid.

"You know, I have for a long time been thinking about retirement. I am not a young man," he responded. "So when the situation got so hot, and when my country was in the process of destruction... I decided to end up my diplomatic career and start a new life with my family."

Asked if his life had been threatened, he said, "I haven't had any threat... I had some reservations on some of the policies... that's all."

He said he applied to Canada because he had visited the country and liked the weather and the people. His whereabouts during the interview were not disclosed.

The U.S. State Department says it played no role in helping the former ambassador gain admission to Canada.

As a landed immigrant, Mr. Mashat is eligible for Canadian citizenship after three years. He bought a home in the Vancouver area and said he might consider working as an academic.

"I will start a new life. I will read. I will write books maybe," Mr. Mashat told (CBC) from Vancouver.

He chose Canada because he had visited the country in 1988 and liked the people and climate of its west coast. Canadian opposition party officials have said the ambassador received approval to enter Canada about five times faster than is the case for most foreigners seeking land immigrant status.

Mr. Mashat said he offered no information to intelligence services in Canada or the United States in exchange for speedy entry into Canada.

Israel seeks closer ties with Jewish settlements

TEL AVIV (R) — The Israeli government has launched a drive to knit Jewish settlements in the occupied territories to Israel proper, Israeli television reported.

The report was broadcast on Friday night only hours after Soviet Foreign Minister Alexander Bessmertnykh left Israel after a visit during which he played down differences over the settlements.

A television newsman, introducing a story on Jewish settlement, said a "great effort was underway to establish contiguity" between the settlements and the state of Israel, especially with the West Bank city of Hebron.

Mr. Bessmertnykh, the highest Soviet official to visit the Jewish state, angered Israeli leaders with comments he made in Jordan Thursday in which he refused to rule out restrictions on Soviet immigration to stop Israel building new settlements.

About 250,000 Soviet Jews have moved to Israel since 1989 when Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev eased curbs on their movements.

In Israel, Mr. Bessmertnykh declined to comment on his earlier remarks and struck a conciliatory note. "We agreed that our country would try to put pressure on any country in the (peace) process," he said before leaving for Cairo.

About 100,000 Jews have settled among the Palestinians in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

Left-wing parliamentarians say plans are afoot to double the Jewish population in the occupied territories in the next few years and building work has started to expand the settlements.

Washington and Moscow, which both back land for peace as a basis for Middle East talks, view the settlements as obstacles to peace. Both also say Soviet immigrants should not go to the settlements.

Israel says it will not direct the newcomers to the occupied territories but there is nothing to stop them moving there on their own initiative. Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir has vowed never to give up an inch of territory.

An unidentified settler told Israeli television that his small community between Hebron and Israel was slated for dramatic growth. "We hope the new immigrants will also come," he said.

Mr. Bessmertnykh also refrained from repeating his rejection of Israel's preconditions to Moscow's co-sponsorship with the United States of a Middle East peace conference.

Israel says ambassadors must be exchanged if Moscow wants to act as a sponsor, but Mr. Bessmertnykh said only that diplomatic ties, cut over the 1967 war, would be resumed when conditions were right. The two countries have consular relations.

Mr. Bessmertnykh also said that Soviet Jews emigrating to Israel might be allowed to retain their citizenship.

"I think this question deserves to be clarified seriously. Here we must restore or establish legal fairness," Mr. Bessmertnykh said at the Ben-Gurion airport near Tel Aviv, concluding his six-hour visit to the Jewish state.

Some 400,000 Soviet Jews who have emigrated to Israel since mass Jewish emigration began in 1969, and thousands of others who left the Soviet Union for other countries on Israeli visas have been forced to relinquish their Soviet citizenship.

Asked about the issue at the airport news conference, Mr. Bessmertnykh said:

"I can tell you that the question you raised is now being actively analysed. I think it will be resolved in such a way that our citizens leaving for Israel would not feel themselves discriminated, as compared with those leaving for other countries. So I think full fairness will be restored here."

Baghdad Observer signals shift in information policy

BAGHDAD (Agencies) — Iraq's small band of English-language newspaper readers had a shock on Saturday: for the first time in more than 10 years, the Baghdad Observer failed to carry a cover picture of President Saddam Hussein.

A spokesman for the Information Ministry, which publishes the paper, said the absence of the president's picture — or even a story about him — reflected a new policy: such photos will be used only when news events merit them.

It appears to be part of the government's pledge to create a more open and democratic society in Iraq in the wake of the Gulf war.

The spokesman said the broadsheet newspaper's front page had carried a picture of the president in every issue since the start of the Iraq-Iran war in 1980.

The photos were often old, studio-type pictures of the president unrelated to any news event. Baghdad's Arabic-language newspapers, with much wider circulations, continued the old policy, however. All carried photos and articles about the president.

The main Arabic dailies continued to devote large chunks of their front pages to President Saddam's photographs under the policy introduced in 1980. The front page of the pro-government Kurdish newspaper Al Iraq had an old picture of a smiling Saddam dressed as a Kurd with snow-clad mountains in the background.

President Saddam has tried to distance himself from day-to-day affairs in Iraq since the end of the Gulf war and post-war rebellions in the Kurdish north and mainly Shi'ite south.

Husseini cuts short tour to meet Baker

LONDON (R) — Palestinian nationalist leader Faisal Al Hussein said Friday he was cutting short a European tour to return to occupied Jerusalem for a meeting with U.S. Secretary of State James Baker next Tuesday.

Mr. Hussein, who led a Palestinian delegation in previous talks with Mr. Baker, said he hoped Mr. Baker would have some answers after inconclusive negotiations last month with Israel.

"We want some answers from him about what happened in his last talks with the Israelis," Mr. Hussein said. "For our part, we want a full role for Europe and the United Nations."

He told a news conference in London he was returning "because I hope this meeting (with Mr. Baker) will give us a clear idea if this peace process is going forward in the face of obstacles."

Mr. Baker is trying to get Arabs and Israelis to agree to a peace conference co-sponsored by Washington and Moscow but he interrupted a Middle East tour last month when his mother died.

Mr. Hussein said he hoped that a ground-breaking visit to Israel by Soviet Foreign Minister Alexander Bessmertnykh would give impetus to the U.S. effort.

"We believe the Soviet Union has cards to play and we believe even the United States needs the role of the Soviet Union to pressure Israel to accept the start of the peace process," Mr. Hussein said.

Palestinian sources said they hoped Mr. Bessmertnykh would use Jewish immigration from the Soviet Union and the resumption of ties as levers to force concessions from Israel.

Intense negotiations by Mr. Baker with Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir failed to break the impasse over a role for the United Nations, which Israel wants to exclude, and the composition of a Palestinian delegation.

Faisal Al Hussein

Mr. Hussein, who has been lobbying British support for the Palestinian position in meetings with Foreign Secretary Douglas Hurd and other British officials, said there was still a "golden opportunity" for peace.

For Palestinians the obstacles are continued Jewish settlement in the occupied territories, Mr. Shamir's opposition to returning the occupied territories and his refusal to talk to Palestinians like Mr. Hussein who come from Arab Jerusalem.

Mr. Hussein has been accused by Israel of fomenting unrest and kindling the Palestinian uprising which began in 1987.

He has been jailed several times.

Mr. Hussein repeated the Palestinian demand that a peace conference should be "under the umbrella of international legitimacy," a reference to the United Nations.

He repeated his allegiance to the PLO which he called the Palestinians' only legitimate representative. Israel refuses to meet the PLO.

Ethiopian president names new cabinet, seeks to end civil war

ADDIS ABABA (AP) — President Mengistu Haile Mariam has appointed a 20-member cabinet and instructed them to seek an end to decades of civil war.

Prime Minister Tesfaye Dinka, who proposed the new cabinet, said Thursday its top priority would be to end the fighting that has enveloped almost a third of this Horn of Africa nation.

But Western diplomats, interviewed by telephone from Nairobi, said they saw little hope the cabinet changes would affect the course of the conflict.

"That depends on what happens at the peace talks in London later this month," one diplomat said.

Another diplomat thought the absence of hawks in the new cabinet might improve prospects for negotiations between the government and three rebel groups.

"But that depends on who the government sends to the negotiations," he said.

The envoys spoke on condition they not be identified further.

U.S. Assistant Secretary of State Herman Cohen is scheduled to mediate peace talks in London later this month between Ethiopia's government and the Tigrean, Eritrean and Oromo rebels.

Mr. Tesfaye, a moderate who previously served as foreign minister, was appointed by Col. Meles Zenawi two weeks ago with instructions to form a new cabinet.

His selections included mainly moderate technocrats. The new cabinet has eight fresh faces, including deputy prime ministers. Eight ministers in the previous cabinet retained their posts and four were given new ones. The previous cabinet had 26 members, including four deputy prime ministers.

The Tigre People's Liberation Front, which has sought Col. Mengistu's ouster since 1975, has seized two northwestern provinces and parts of three others.

Another insurgent group, the Eritrean People's Liberation Front, has pushed down the Red Sea coast, threatening Assab, the only major port still in government hands.

The Eritreans have been fighting a 30-year war for the independence of their northernmost province of Eritrea, which they largely control.

The Oromo Liberation Front, a small group, operates mainly across southern Ethiopia, but the major insurgencies have insisted on its inclusion in the peace talks.

Sudan says rebels downed relief plane

KHARTOUM (R) — Sudanese rebels shot down a light plane carrying emergency supplies and banknotes to a town in southern Sudan, state-run Radio Omdurman said Saturday.

It quoted army sources as saying the Cessna was shot down by guerrillas of the Sudan People's Liberation Army on Friday.

The plane, belonging to the private firm Nile Safari, was on its way to Awled, a town 960 kilometres southwest of Khartoum, with supplies of food, medicine and cash.

The radio gave no details of possible casualties.

Algeria's Islamists promise to try, expropriate former leaders

ALGIERS (R) — The Islamic Salvation Front (FIS), Algeria's largest opposition party, has promised to prosecute former state officials and expropriate their property if it wins parliamentary elections in June.

Ali Belhadj, the radical fundamentalist who is number two man in the FIS, said a FIS government would use their property to help pay off Algeria's foreign debts.

"We are going to bring in all the thieves and sell everything they own to pay off the debt. There will be no forgiveness towards them. They (ministers and army leaders) will be tried for killing and torturing Muslims," he told a rally in the provincial town of Blida Friday evening.

He said the prosecutions would cover leading government figures since Algeria's independence in 1962 and he specifically mentioned former Interior Minister Hedi Khediri and retired army General Mohammad Attia.

Both men were in office during a government campaign against the underground Islamic movement in the 1980s and during the riots of October 1988, when more than 150 people were killed, mainly by the army.

The president of the FIS, Abassi Madani, told the same rally he still planned to organise a national strike to demand that President Chadli Benjedid resign, saying he was an obstacle to the political development of the country.

"President Benjedid must be replaced. We do not want to replace him through a coup d'etat... but through a total strike where we will come out on the streets and all economic activity will be paralysed," he said.

The crowds cried "enemy of God" in response, referring to the president.

Hachemi Sahouni, another FIS leader, said the front would take part in the elections despite reservations about the government's will to make the voting free and fair.

Former Afghan king unveils peace plan

ROME (R) — The former king of Afghanistan has unveiled a detailed plan for replacing 12 years of civil war in his homeland with free elections and a parliamentary system.

"It is for the Afghans to freely decide on our country's future regime," exiled monarch Zahir Shah told Reuters at his villa in Rome, where he has lived since being deposed in a 1973 coup.

The plan drawn up by the 76-year-old former king, a symbol of legitimate authority for many Afghans, calls for setting up a committee of rebel Mujahadeen commanders, politicians and other figures who live in Afghanistan and abroad.

The committee would call an emergency Afghan Jirga, or assembly of personalities, to create a temporary executive charged with making the peace and drafting a constitution.

Mujahadeen guerrillas have been fighting the Kabul government since the Soviet Union sent troops in 1979 to prop up the government. Moscow withdrew troops a decade later.

Under the plan, the executive would also prepare for holding under U.N. auspices a wider Loya Jirga, the traditional Afghan assembly of tribal notables, which would work towards free elections and a parliamentary system.

"I am convinced that, in line with the basic principles of Islam and our national traditions the majority of the people of Afghanistan will choose and support a democratic form of government," Zahir Shah said in a rare interview.

A source close to the former king said the plan had already been confidentially presented and positively received by various parties and governments involved in Afghan affairs.

Diplomats say diminished U.S. and Soviet interest in fueling the war, Saudi Arabian disenchantment with fundamentalist guerrillas who turned against them over the Gulf war and warming relations between Riyadh and Tehran have combined to offer new options.

The king said he was ready to return to his country, even if it

Zahir Shah meant risking his life.

"As a patriot, I have put my person and my life at the service of my people. My personal safety has never been a concern to me and is the least of my worries."

"Returning to the homeland is however a strong urge shared by all Afghans. I have always put my trust in God and I shall return to my beloved country if the people of Afghanistan so decide," said Zahir Shah.

A keen walker, the former king lives with his wife in a spacious villa set in rolling fields on Rome's northern outskirts, his home guarded around the clock by paramilitary police.

The tall, white-haired Zahir Shah was deposed while on a visit to Rome to seek medical help for an eye complaint, from which he still suffers. Overall his health remains good.

Some fundamentalists fighting the government in Kabul, notably the powerful Hezb-i Islami rebel group, oppose Zahir Shah's return.

To them the king, who ruled for 40 years until his overthrow, represents the old feudal order which they want to replace with Islamic law.

Asked if he was worried by last month's capture of the eastern garrison town of Khost by guerrillas, a serious setback for president Najibullah, the king said the victory was mainly due to local fighters.

"Indeed they had learned from past experience the importance of improved coordination and cooperation between different groups... they now realised that unity of action at operational level and taking their own decision are the main factors of success."

JORDAN TIMES DAILY GUIDE AND CALENDAR

JORDAN TELEVISION
Tel: 773111-19
PROGRAMME TWO
18:00	Cartoons
18:15	L'ecole de Paris
19:00	News in French
19:15	Stoatgemo
19:30	News in Hebrew
20:00	News in Arabic
20:30	Mother and Son
21:10	All our Children
22:00	News in English
22:30	Paradise
PRAYER TIMES
04:00	Fajr
05:30	(Shamra) Duhr
12:30	Dhuhr
16:12	Asr
19:28	Maghrib
20:55	Isha
CHURCHES
St. Mary of Nazareth Church Swifich Tel: 810740
Assumption of God Church, Tel: 62785
St. Joseph Church Tel: 624590
Church of the Annunciation Tel: 627400
De la Salle Church Tel: 661757
Terrence Church Tel: 622366
Church of the Annunciation Tel: 62541
Anglican Church Tel: 625385, Tel: 62543
Armenian Catholic Church Tel: 771331
Armenian Orthodox Church Tel: 771331
Syrian Orthodox Church Tel: 771751
Armenian International Church Tel: 683326
Evangelical Lutheran Church Tel: 81225
The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints Tel: 818617, 654932
Church of the Nazarene Tel: 675691
WEATHER
Bulletin supplied by the Department of Meteorology.
A further rise in temperatures will take place and winds will be westerly moderate to fresh, causing dust in desert areas. In Amman, it will be dusty with northerly moderate winds and calm seas.
Amman	Min./max. temp. 18 / 33
Amman	24 / 40
Amman	16 / 35
Jordan Valley	22 / 38

USEFUL TELEPHONE NUMBERS
NIGHT DUTY
AMMAN:
Dr. Walid Soudi	683266
Dr. Rami Mizar	894788
Dr. Mahmoud Azam	819925
Dr. Mohammad Al Ajam	894184
First pharmacy	661912
Fordown pharmacy	776336
Al Asana pharmacy	637055
Nairookh pharmacy	623672
Al Salem pharmacy	636730
Yasoub pharmacy	640445
Shamsat pharmacy	637660
BEIRUT:
Dr. Mouna Abu Baker	(—)
Al Shams' pharmacy	273825

EMERGENCIES
Food Control Centre	687111
Civil Defence Department	661111
Civil Defence Immediate
Rescue	630341
Civil Defence Emergency	109
Rescue Police	192, 621111, 637777
Fire Brigade	891228
Blood Bank	775121
Highway Police	843402
Traffic Police	896390
Public Security Department	630321
Hotel Complaints	605800
Price Complaints	661176
Water and Sewerage
Complaints	897467
Amman Municipality
Complaints	787111
Telephone Information

HOSPITALS
AMMAN:
Haram Medical Centre	813813/2
Khalid Maternity, J. Amn	642816
Atch Maternity, J. Amn	64241/2
Jabal Amman Maternity	642362
Mahm. J. Amman	636140
Palestine, Shamsat	64417/4
Shamsat Hospital	669313
University Hospital	845045
Al-Munir Hospital	667219

||
||
||

Home News

Committee to determine cause of crop destruction in Jordan Valley

AMMAN (J.T.) — A committee set up by Prime Minister Mudar Badran to examine the question of damage sustained by crops in the central Jordan Valley region, in all its aspects, is due to convene Sunday under the chairmanship of Dr. Abdul Aziz Wishah, Jordan Valley Authority (JVA) secretary general.

The committee, which groups representatives of the ministries of water and irrigation, agriculture and health as well as the University of Jordan and the Royal Scientific Society (RSS), is expected to discuss the issue in all its aspects and focus attention on the water allegedly polluted, the soil and the weather conditions in order to determine the cause of the damage to the crops, estimated at JD 60 million.

Farmers have threatened to sue the government for the damage to their crops and Friday staged a protest march against three government ministers and parliamentarians who failed to attend a meeting to discuss the question as had been planned.

The committee chairman, Dr. Wishah, said that he had toured the affected regions and found that serious damage was inflicted on peaches, grapes and tomatoes and lesser degree damage to other crops.

Experts called to give their opinion on the situation expressed conflicting interpretations of this phenomenon, with some of them attributing the damage to pests, others blaming the soil and others insisting that it was the quality of water used, Dr. Wishah said.

He said that it was this conflict of views that prompted the prime minister to set up an ad hoc committee to study the issue and to report to the government on its findings.

Bakery workers warned to obtain valid work permits by Thursday

ZARQA (J.T.) — Workers employed by bakeries in Jordan have until this coming Thursday to settle their dues, in the form of fees for work permits required for every non-Jordanian worker to get employment in the Kingdom, according to Labour Minister Abdul Karim Al Dughmi.

"The Ministry of Labour is serious about ordering workers not complying with the Jordanian laws to leave the country if by the deadline they fail to have acquired the permits," the minister said at a meeting held at the governor's office here.

Owners of bakeries in Jordan have been dodging payment of the JD 100 required from each non-Jordanian in their employment, and the non-Jordanian workers also refuse to pay.

The Ministry of Labour believes that nearly 5,000 foreign workers are currently employed in Jordan's 700 registered bakeries.

Out of 160,000 non-Jordanians employed in the country only 23 per cent work legally, according to a recent statistical bulletin issued by the Ministry of Labour.

Those employed illegally in Jordan owe millions of dinars in arrears to the Jordanian government.

Prime Minister Mudar Badran last month urged the Labour Ministry to try to find work for Jordanian job-seekers, who now number about 106,000, and to give priority in employment to Jordanians over the non-Jordanian workers.

Ministry officials interviewed on Jordan Television last Thursday said that they had no alternative but to apply the labour law, which now prohibits the employment of non-Jordanians in a range of jobs, including work in bakeries.

Mr. Dughmi said at the meeting in Zarqa that owners of bakeries and other employers of non-Jordanian workers should cooperate with the Ministry of Labour in order to help the job-seekers.

Referring to the bakeries, Mr. Dughmi said his ministry had nothing to do with the bread prices. He said the Ministry of Supply only could change the bread prices and the issue had no relation with the non-Jordanians abiding by the law of the country.

The minister said the Vocational Training Corporation (VTC) was opening new courses and centres to train job-seekers in various trades, including bakery work and truck driving. "From now on the Ministry of Labour will not issue work permits for the non-Jordanian workers because this occupation can easily be filled by the Jordanian drivers," the minister said.

At the outset of the meeting, the minister was briefed by Zarqa Governor Mohammad Al Shobaki on the labour market in the Zarqa region.

Mr. Dughmi later opened an annual exhibition displaying products of the Vocational Training Centres in the Zarqa region. These included wood work, decor, central heating, sanitation equipment, electric appliances, equipment for auto mechanics, electricity, building.

The exhibition also displays products of 30 different companies and workshops in the governorate.

The multilope, a Jordanian innovation that wins two medals at the International Exhibition of Inventions in Geneva

Jordanian honoured for innovation at Geneva fair

By Maha Addasi
Special to the Jordan Times

AMMAN — A Jordanian architect has invented reusable envelopes or multilopes, as he calls them, for which he won the gold medal and the gold plated medal at the 19th international exhibition of inventions in Geneva making him the only inventor among the 600 participating to win two prizes at the event held last April.

Abdel Elah Malhas, a graduate of the American University of Beirut (AUB) is the first Jordanian to ever participate in the exhibition held annually in Geneva. He invented an envelope that is designed to be used four different times.

The original envelope has three lines on it, each indicating a partition. When a person sends the letter he or she writes the address above the first line. The recipient gets the letter, cuts above that line, thus removing the stamp and address and the envelope is as good as new, only slightly smaller. By reaching inside the now cut envelope one can pull out the next adhesive strip in order to close the envelope once again.

Mr. Malhas said that the multilope has many benefits other than the obvious. "The multilope offers conserving of the global natural resources by 120 per cent. The multilope also saves money by the same percentage," Mr. Malhas said, adding that once the multilope becomes international 50 per cent of the profits will go to the needy children of the world.

"I am grateful for many things that God has bestowed upon me and by inventing something to benefit the needy I feel I can show some appreciation to God."

The sample multilopes have all been hand-made in Jordan. Their cost is slightly higher than that of envelope sold in Jordan, or they cost about 30 fils each. Even without mechanising the process of making the multilopes, their cost remains lower than that of envelopes of the same size sold in Europe, Mr. Malhas said.

"I hope that we can mechanise the making of the multilope here in Jordan," Mr. Malhas said.

Mr. Malhas received the gold medal, the prize of the World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO) which is given to the best inventor from a developing country. The gold plated medal is given for the benefits of the invention.

The president of the Council of State of the republic and canton of Geneva, Bernard Ziegler said that the multilope is an invention that touches every one, every day (Post offices in Geneva alone handled 1 million envelopes daily), and he considered the multilope the most important invention he saw out of the 600 others at the exhibition.

According to Mr. Malhas the coverage was excellent, as the Swiss, French and German television stations, two radio stations and six newspapers and magazines covered the event and highlighted the multilope idea that was invented by a "Jordanian."

"Many people started to know more about Jordan because in the section where I displayed my invention I put up large posters of the different tourist areas in Jordan," Mr. Malhas said, adding that he regretted not getting much appreciation for the multilope in the country that means the most to him, Jordan his homeland.

A great deal of controversy surrounded the multilope and whether it is considered an invention remains to be seen. According to Mr. Malhas, the officer in charge of registering patents for inventions at the Ministry of Trade and Industry did not consider the multilope an invention because it did not meet "the criteria to be considered one and refused to register it as such."

Dr. Abdullah Toukan at the Higher Council for Science and Technology said that the idea of the multilope was original and that he had never seen anything like it before so it is by definition an invention.

"To this day the multilope remains unregistered in my own country," Mr. Malhas said. "There have been no channels in their matter so far, and the controversy remains unresolved," he added.

Arab Cooperation Council will rise again, chief says

By Rana Sababha
Reuters

AMMAN — The head of the Arab Cooperation Council (ACC) predicted on Saturday the moribund group would rise from the ashes of the Gulf war.

"Legally speaking, the ACC still exists," Secretary General Hilmi Nammar, an Egyptian, told Reuters in an interview.

But Arab political sources ruled out a quick recovery for the fledgling common market grouping Egypt, Iraq, Jordan and Yemen, that was one of the first casualties of the Gulf crisis.

"The bloc's revival depends on what will happen in Iraq," one of the sources said. "Frankly, I cannot see President Mubarak sitting at the same table with President Hussein and therefore the bloc will remain paralysed and could eventually die."

Mr. Nammar said: "Certainly the Gulf crisis has frozen activities until matters return to normal among the members. "But I do not believe there is any conviction in any of the four countries to withdraw from the council," he added.

The ACC was formed in February 1989, aspiring to become an economic grouping serving 80 million people. Politically, the four members never had much in common and they gained few practical benefits from 29 cooperation agreements.

"We were about to start acting to implement these accords, but the conditions which the member countries underwent did not allow us to take any measures," said Mr. Nammar.

Sitting under portraits of Iraqi President Saddam Hussein, Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak, King Hussein and Yemen's President Ali Abdullah Saleh, Mr. Nammar said he and his 22 employees had done little work since the Gulf crisis erupted but they were still drawing their full salaries. ACC officials say lay-offs might be necessary if the four member states do not replenish the group's coffers by the end of the year.

The political sources say each of the four countries, for one reason or another, would like to see the group revived.

"Iraq will use it as a gate through which it will gradually be readmitted into the Arab fold," one said.

"Jordan has always believed in Arab solidarity and the bloc will continue to give it a strong cushion to lean on and face any future Arab-Israeli developments," he added.

"The group could also become a nucleus for a future Arab bloc with Syria, Lebanon, any entity on the Israeli-held West Bank, Sudan and the five-nation Arab Maghreb Union — Libya, Algeria, Tunisia, Morocco and Mauritania."

Ministry will not be lenient towards violators of waste water law — Fariz

AMMAN (J.T.) — Factory owners in Jordan have until the end of May to comply with regulations concerning the treatment of waste water coming out of their factories, and the ministry will not be lenient towards violators after this deadline, according to Minister of Industry and Trade Ziyad Fariz.

Mr. Fariz said that his ministry trusted that the industrialists and owners of the factories, especially those located along the Zarqa River, would abide by regulations, which, among other things, require the installation of special equipment for the treatment of waste water so that it would not pollute the water flowing into the King Talal Dam.

In a statement to the Jordan News Agency, Petra, the minister said that the factories had been informed of the required specifications and the instructions to follow to ensure that the water remained unpolluted. They were also required to refrain from dumping waste into the river.

The law is being enforced at the moment because of the severe damage the polluted water had caused to the agricultural produce, he noted. "In the past years, the water did not cause so much ecological damage nor was the water so polluted because many factories had abided by the law," said the minister. Only 38 factories, 12 of which are located within the Zarqa River basin, have not yet abided by the regulations, the minister noted.

The Council of Ministers last week set up a four-member ministerial committee, chaired by Minister of Municipal and Rural Affairs and the Environment Mubarrad Al Zaben, to conduct a wide-scale study designed to find suitable sites for dumping refuse and to deal with the quality of water in the Zarqa River.

The creation of the committee came close on the heels of a statement by Minister of Water and Irrigation Saad Hayel Serour who announced that the water of the King Talal Dam was polluted by boron and chemical substances and warned that the contamination could reach unprecedented levels this summer.

The minister blamed the situation on the factories and plants along the Zarqa River, which, he said, feeds the reservoir behind the King Talal Dam.

Jordan, Libya discuss cooperation in education

AMMAN (Petra) — Minister of Higher Education Saad Al Tal received Saturday a delegation representing a popular Libyan delegation currently visiting Jordan and discussed with its members scopes of cooperation between Jordanian and Libyans universities.

Dr. Tal welcomed Libya's moves aimed at consolidating joint Arab action and stressed Jordan's keenness to enhance cooperation with Arab states for the best of the Arab peoples.

The members of the visiting delegation briefed Dr. Tal on the nature of their mission in Jordan and voiced their support for official and public Jordanian moves attempting to support Arab solidarity.

They emphasised that Libya was doing all it could to support

Arab solidarity and pointed out that the Libyan government had recently opened its borders with Egypt and removed obstacles impeding the transit of goods and travel of passengers.

According to the delegation members, the Libyan government has issued a decision allowing the import of Jordanian industrial and agricultural products by Libyan markets, without any administrative measures, in a bid to support the Jordanian economy. The Jordanian products will be completely exempt from all tariffs and taxes.

The delegation members landed the democratic climate prevailing in the Kingdom and measures taken by the Jordanian government to facilitate the delegation's meeting with representatives of public establishments.

The delegation also visited the Royal Scientific Society (RSS) where it was briefed by its president, Dr. Hani Al Mulk, on the achievements and the aims of the society and its role in the transfer of technology.

Dr. Mulk called for enhancing scientific cooperation between Jordan and Libya and stressed that Jordan was keen on promoting and bolstering its relations with all its Arab brethren.

The delegation also visited the Islamic Da'wa College, of the Ministry of Awqaf and Islamic Affairs, and were received by Dean of the College Dr. Rajeh Al Kurdi, who briefed them on the various departments and its educational system.

CSCC team goes shopping

AMMAN (J.T.) — A two-member team from the Civil Service Consumer Corporation (CSCC) left Amman Saturday for visits to Italy, Poland and Tunisia, expected to last ten days.

The team, led by Rami Ibrahim, secretary general of the Ministry of Supply, will hold talks with business; these three countries to secure commodities needed by the CSCC.

Mohammad Abdulla, the CSCC director, said last month that plans were drawn up to keep the CSCC branches in Jordan stocked with sufficient goods in demand by the public so that the beneficiaries would not be forced to pay extra prices elsewhere.

Government employees and their families benefit from the CSCC branches which now total 23.

WHAT'S GOING ON

The following listings are compiled from monthly bulletins and the daily Arabic press. Readers are advised to verify the listed time and place with the concerned institutions.

EXHIBITION

- Art exhibition by Nazir Ismail at the French Cultural Centre.
- Exhibition of etchings, lithographs and monographs, by Ahmad Nawash and Yasser Duweik at Abdul Hameed Shoman Foundation (10 a.m. — 5 p.m.)
- Exhibition of Arab calligraphy at the University of Jordan.
- Plastic art exhibition by Jordanian artists Ziad Al Momani, Jawad Hatamleh and Sultan Al Kofahi at Yarmouk University.
- Exhibition of paintings and handicrafts by Jordanian artist Jamilah Saleh at Mn'ia University.
- Exhibition of embroideries, knit wear, artificial flowers and wood work by deaf students at Queen Alia Centre for the Hearing Impaired, Zarqa.

Iraqi oil flow to Jordan rises

By P.V. Vivekanand
Jordan Times Staff Reporter

AMMAN — Jordan is now receiving oil supplies from Iraq at around 37,000 to 40,000 barrels a day, trucked daily to the Kingdom from its eastern neighbour, according to officials and industry sources.

"Iraqi oil supply to Jordan from Kirkuk fields has increased and it is only a matter of weeks before the quantity could be raised to (the pre-crisis level of) 50,000 or 60,000 barrels a day if Jordan so desires," said a senior Iraqi source in Baghdad.

The source said oil loading facilities at Tripoli 1 (T1) were fully operational after damages suffered during the Gulf war had been repaired.

Jordanian officials confirmed that the daily flow of Iraqi oil to the Kingdom had risen from 22,000 barrels two weeks ago, but did not give any specific figure for the current supply.

There is a dramatic rise in the number of oil tankers crossing the Iraqi-Jordanian border, but the tankers are of various shapes and sizes, making it difficult to make an accurate assessment of the quantity of the oil flow. But industry sources put the figure at 37,000 to 40,000 barrels per day.

Jordan's oil imports from Iraq represent Baghdad's repayment of debts to Amman incurred prior to Iraq's takeover of Kuwait which brought about the imposition of international trade sanctions against Iraq. The agreement to take oil in lieu of cash was also made prior to the invasion, and thus the sanctions are not applicable to the Kingdom's oil imports from Iraq, international legal experts say.

The resumption of near pre-crisis level supply of oil from Iraq to Jordan comes at a most opportune time for the Kingdom, which has to draw from its foreign exchange reserves to be up to date with its servicing of foreign debts for the year 1990 before rescheduling payments due in 1991 and 1992.

During the two and a half months of suspension in Iraqi oil exports to Jordan, the Kingdom had to draw from its reserves to pay for alternate oil purchases from Syria and Yemen.

"We were forced to draw from the reserves to pay for part of the oil purchases," said a senior official. But he declined to give figures and also refrained from commenting on whether Jordan had made better arrangements with Syria or Yemen.

No officials from the Ministry of Energy and Mineral Resources were immediately available for comment.

The daily consumption in Jordan prior to the eruption of the Gulf crisis in August was around 50,000 barrels per day. But the influx of hundreds of thousands of expatriates and refugees from Kuwait and Iraq raised the consumption level to 65,000 barrels per day in subsequent months. The figure also represented a seasonal increase in the use of heating fuel during the winter months.

Conservation measures adopted since then have reduced the consumption by about 30 per cent, officials have said.

Jordan's import of oil from Iraq was one of the issues touched by the International Monetary Fund (IMF) during last week's meetings on the Kingdom's economic restructuring programme, highly informed sources said.

"They asked for a clear accounting of Iraq's debts to Jordan," said one of the sources. "They also wanted to price Iraqi oil exports to Jordan at a more realistic rate than the present concessionary rate," added the source.

Under the pre-crisis agreement, Iraq supplies oil to Jordan at $16.4 a barrel regardless of international market prices, which, at one point during the run-up to the Gulf war in January, hit as much as $40 a barrel. Present prices are in the region of $20 per barrel.

But, the source said, the issue of Iraqi oil supply to Jordan or its price was not any hurdle in reaching agreement between the IMF and the government. "They (the IMF) know that in view of the present situation of Jordan, any imposition of further burdens, superficial or otherwise, will only hamper the restructuring programme," the source added.

OIC meeting debated reports

AMMAN (Petra) — Secretary General of the Ministry of Planning Dr. Safwan Toukan returned home from Istanbul, Turkey, after leading Jordan's delegation at the meeting of the follow-up committee of the Organisation of Islamic Conference's (OIC) economic and commercial cooperation permanent committee convened there on May 7.

Dr. Toukan said the committee had discussed several reports, one prepared by the OIC General Secretariat, on the achievements of the OIC and its role in enhancing economic cooperation among member states.

Dr. Toukan added that the committee had discussed another report by the general secretariat dealing with the OIC member states preferential treatment system.

Swiss Centre
SWISS CENTRE
المركز الوطني للتكنولوجيا السويسرية

A TOUCH OF CLASS

Aelpi bar
Garden grill

Management
ERNST LINGER

NOW OPEN FOR LUNCH & DINNER
Jabel amman, off 1st circle, opposite Spanish Cultural Centre
For reservation call 638212

Jordan Times

An independent Arab political daily published in English by the Jordan Press Foundation
Established 1975
جريدة الأردن يومية عربية سياسية مستقلة تصدر بالانجليزية عن المؤسسة الصحفية الأردنية

Chairman of the Board of Directors:
MAHMOUD AL KAYED

Director General:
MOHAMMAD AMAD

Editor-in-Chief:
GEORGE S. HAWATMEH

Editorial and advertising offices:
Jordan Press Foundation,
University Road, P.O. Box 6710, Amman, Jordan.

Telephones: 667171/6, 670141-4

Telex: 21497 ALRAI JO

Facsimile: 661242

The Jordan Times is published daily except Fridays.
Subscription and advertising rates are available from the Jordan Times advertising department.

News below headlines

THE MINISTRY of Education is making headlines these days. Naturally it is attracting attention of the public as well as the press. The news below the headlines, however, did not start with the recent massive reshuffle of personnel at the ministry or with the new guidelines and rules on parental attendance of their children's school social activities. The problem of education is indeed bigger and broader than the latest developments, important as they may be. The real issues of education go back to several years and touch upon the core of educational policy in the country. In fact they can be traced back to the perennial lack of a coherent and steady course that has enjoyed support across the spectrum of the Jordanian society.

It is unfortunate that our educational policy — or rather policies — have fluctuated from year to year on bases that appear to have also changed from one minister to another. In the process, the country has been deprived of an evolutionary policy that is free of arbitrary fluctuations unrelated to the overall objectives of an enlightened, moral and progressive elementary and secondary education. There is a pressing need, therefore, to save our schools and pupils from the whims and prejudices of any person or group of persons who may not enjoy the overwhelming support of parents and children alike.

Against the backdrop of recent fumbblings in educational policy and practices, such an overriding objective has become a high priority issue that awaits urgent rectification. One way to address this crisis is to re-energise the existing National Board of Education by entrusting it with an expanded mandate to include the review of our educational line and draw a blueprint for its restructuring. As things stand now, the 18-member board confines its deliberations to subjects that do not really matter. In the same vein, the two houses of Parliament would also be invited to enhance the mandate of their existing education committees in order to facilitate a more thorough debate of the core issues affecting their work. Moreover the board and the parliament committees need to be more broadly constituted so that they reflect more faithfully the wide spectrum of opinion in the country. Through this, and other positive steps, a genuine national process of educational development can be started. Otherwise, education policy in Jordan would remain a victim of whimsical decisions and lobbying of various political groups.

Jordan prides itself in the fact that it is a centrist country that enjoys international support for its moderation and reasonableness. This status and image of the Kingdom stands to sustain considerable damage if extremist ideas are allowed to take root. Our educators should address more fundamental problems and challenges confronting the students population instead of making an issue of subjects that are of marginal relevance to true and healthy education. With unemployment rampant in the country and more than half of Jordanians are in the student bracket, the Ministry of Education is better off devising and working on remedies and solutions than it is banning fathers from watching their daughters compete in school sports. Even more vital is to articulate a policy that aims at preparing our future generations to be good and productive citizens rather than condition them to attain ephemeral political gains.

ARABIC PRESS COMMENTARIES

The Middle East question is a direct result of Israel's aggression on the Arab Nation and its occupation of Palestinian land for which numerous U.N. Security Council resolutions have been passed in order to achieve peace, said Al Rai daily Saturday. The Israeli aggression is the oldest issue in the files of the United Nations and still it is not solved despite the resolutions and the realisation of the world community of the grave injustice that had befallen the Palestinian people, the paper added. For their part, the Arab countries have been calling for a peaceful settlement, and the exchange of land for peace to no avail, the paper noted. All Arab countries — those which backed the U.S.-led alliance against Iraq and those which remained neutral — have supported the U.N. Security Council resolutions that ordered Iraq to pull out its forces from Kuwait, and they did that out of a belief that all Security Council resolutions should be respected by all nations, the paper noted. It said that it is the right of all these Arab states to demand that U.N. resolutions on the Middle East question and the Palestine problem be implemented and it is the right of the Arabs to be awarded with the implementation of Security Council resolution 242 and 338 and not punished by the alliance. The paper said the western countries would be displaying their betrayal not only of their allies, but also the very principles of the United Nations, if the present state of affairs persists, and if the Zionists are allowed to maintain their aggression on Arab land.

The initial outcome of a tour by Soviet Foreign Minister Alexander Bessmertnykh of the region point to the fact that Israel is the only intransigent party in the Middle East conflict and it is Israel which continues to place obstacles in the path of a settlement to the Palestine problem, said Al Dastour daily Saturday. One can see that the Soviet minister's talks in Damascus and Amman had centered on the need to implement U.N. Security Council resolutions so that peace can be achieved; but Israel shifted the talks towards its own interests, said the paper. The Israelis discussed the restoration of Soviet relations and avoided any mention of the pressing questions which include the Jewish settlements, nor did they refer to the prospect of an Israeli pull-out, the paper noted. In the Arab side, said the paper, the Soviet minister heard a candid talk about peace based on the international legitimacy, and Israel's withdrawal from the occupied Arab land. Indeed, Moscow's involvement in the peace making process side by side with the United States is very important specially as the US secretary of state is making ready for yet another tour of the region, the paper added. It said if Washington and Moscow join hands in seeking a settlement, hopes will rise in the hearts of the people of the world that the world community is after all, determined to see justice and peace established in this region.

Sunday's Economic Pulse

What to do before the dust settles

IN the third month after the end of the Gulf war, it is evident that the dust has not settled yet, and may not settle for many months to come. After finishing with the announced and agreed agenda, time has come for the hidden agendas.

Turkey would like to use the Kurds to seize the oil rich north of Iraq as its prize for cooperating with America in defeating Iraq. Iran would like to install a puppet Shi'ite government in the southern part of Iraq, and put the holy places under its control, as its prize for being neutral in the war against Iraq.

Britain would like to recover at least part of its colonial privileges in Kuwait and elsewhere in the oil rich Gulf sheikhdoms as its prize for active participation in the war against Iraq.

Israel would like to cash-in for keeping its mouth shut while the coalition was fighting its war against Iraq, to enjoy its military superiority by going public with its intention to annex the West Bank, to accomplish its still hidden agenda of destroying Syria, at least out of caution against possible changes.

The United States won the war but has no plan for peace in the face of an persistent Israeli defiance. It is not sure what to do with its unchallenged power in the area, and whether its interests will be better served by a fragmented and unstable Iraq.

Egypt is keeping silent, as if it has no responsibility for what is taking place in Iraq, at least after its withdrawal from Kuwait and acceptance of all the thirteen resolutions taken by the international Security Council.

Kuwait is hardly an independent state. All important decisions regarding the present and the future difficulties are left to the United States.

Iraq was devastated beyond imagination. The only hands extended are full of knives and explosives. Iran and Turkey are hoping to help themselves into Iraqi territories, while America is blockading Iraq and preventing its central government from acting swiftly to safeguard its territorial integrity.

The PLO is struggling for survival. It lost international and Arab political and financial support. Its only stock in trade is the continued approval of its own people who can do little under the occupation of Israel and much less under suppression of Gulf states.

Jordan is rather depressed and bewildered. It does not like what is going on. Although Jordan formally rejected the annexation of Kuwait, it adhered to the U.N. resolutions and sanctions. Yet Jordan is blamed for not joining the American-led coalition. The Jordanian people are blamed for speaking out and acting as an Arab people, when another Arab people was subjected to destruction. Jordan has nothing to apologise for, yet it does not want to be isolated by-passed politically, or punished financially and economically, or criticised in the Americanised media apparatus.

How things will finally settle is everybody's guess. The only sure thing is that the Middle East, or the Arab World, will never be the same again. A new Arab order or disorder is in the making.

When emotions calm down and history is written, Jordan will get high marks for its honest stance against war and foreign intervention, and for choosing principles over interest. Jordan will then be praised for its democracy, free economy, denouncing terrorism and promoting peace and stability. But until historians take over, foreign and Arab politicians will have inflicted lots of damage. Therefore, Jordan must act, and the following steps should be considered.

— Consolidation of democracy and pluralism through early approval of the National Charter and issuance of a new liberal law for political parties and parliamentary elections.

— Closer relations with Europe and Japan, being the only possible sources of political and financial support, while Gulf states take a negative attitude.

— More political visibility in the Arab and international arenas. When some governments block our way, we should extend our channels directly to the people. We should be the advocates of democracy in the Arab World, and of peace and stability in the international circles.

— Jordan should become more active in Palestinian question. With at least 40 per cent of its population being of Palestinian origin, and being the only place that Palestinians in the Gulf states look for as a protector and refuge of last resort, and with its land as a target for the Israeli plan of transfer, Jordan cannot keep a low profile and watch developments, simply to avoid accusations of undermining the status of PLO as the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people.

— We should make up our mind on whether a new cabinet and a new parliament are needed for the coming stage, or whether the current two branches of government can carry on and lead Jordan through the explosive minefield to the safe shore.

In general, Jordan should not just sit down to wait and see. It should move to the offensive, be more dynamic, and take calculated risks.

242 demands more than Sinai

By Shimon Shetreet

AFTER the Gulf war and the visits by Secretary of State Baker, energetic discussions began on the political level on methods of solving the Arab-Israeli conflict on the basis of Camp David and Resolutions 242 and 338.

The Likud government and its spokesmen have, in recent weeks, girded themselves to present their stand on the future of territories. One of the main spokesmen for the Likud, who articulates his positions both in Israel and abroad in articles and interviews, is MK Binyamin (Beny) Begin.

A central argument voiced by Begin, relying on Prof. Eugene Rostow, a prominent legal personality in the U.S., is that Israel, by evacuating Sinai, has already carried out the principle contained in Resolution 242 concerning withdrawal of Israeli armed forces from territories conquered by it in the six day war. Therefore there is no justification for demanding additional territorial concessions from Israel to implement 242.

From the Likud's viewpoint, this claim has a certain attraction, since it garbs in apparently solid legal raiment the basic political thesis seemingly at the root of Menachem Begin's conception by which he would sacrifice all Sinai and in return could retain control of the West Bank and Gaza, and perhaps also the Golan Heights.

If this argument represents simply "the first line of defence," which a wise and astute advocate puts forward to afford himself the possibility of retreating to a second line of defence, then I have no problem with Begin. It is, after all, in the nature of the conflict to present certain arguments with the intention of trying to persuade by the use of alternative arguments, even if they are not all strong and convincing.

However, if Begin truly and sincerely believes this to be the meaning of Resolution 242, and that his position is a final stand amounting to a sine qua non, then it is doubtful whether it will stand the test of bilateral or multilateral negotiations conducted between Israel, the Palestinians and the Arab states.

with American, and perhaps Russian, participation.

It doesn't take a superior lawyer or an experienced statesman to understand that the claim that 242 calls for withdrawal "from territories" (and not the "territories") does not justify retreating from only one sector. Since several countries are involved, as well as several sectors, it would be unreasonable to assume that the drafters of Resolution 242, or someone now interpreting it, would connect what happens in one sector with what happens in another.

It is inconceivable that Jordan or the Palestinians would accept the argument that conceding Sinai meant carrying out the principle of withdrawal from territories also vis-a-vis the West Bank, and that evacuating Sinai meant also actualising that principle with regard to the Syrian sector.

It is now being said that the principle of withdrawal from territories embodied in 242 relates to a withdrawal whose scope was not determined (according to the interpretation accepted by Israel) in all sectors.

Therefore, it would be better for Likud spokesmen and Begin to recheck their argument thoroughly and not base their claims too firmly on an approach that will have difficulty gaining support in international public opinion and among neutral observers of the conflict — not to mention the potential partners in negotiations, namely the Arab states and Palestinians.

Even according to the alternative interpretation, it is still possible to posit a withdrawal from territories which would leave defensible borders and ensure the security interests of the state of Israel.

That has been the line followed by every government of Israel. This is also my personal position. Forthrightly, however, there is no need to base oneself on a hard, rigorous interpretation claiming that withdrawal from a single sector, Sinai, already represents the full realisation of the principle of withdrawal from territories.

The writer, a Labour member of Israeli Knesset, is a professor of law. The article is reprinted from the Jerusalem Post.

A Malay view: Muslims miss the real issues

By Michael Richardson

KUALA LUMPUR — In an unusually outspoken criticism from within the Islamic community, Anwar Ibrahim, the Malaysian finance minister, has said that many Muslims around the world are marginalised, self-debilitated and living with the onmoded bogyman of the West and the United States.

"Instead of talking about hunger and poverty, there are Muslim countries talking about the application of Sharia law when people are dying of hunger," Mr. Anwar said in an interview with the International Herald Tribune. Sharia is the legal code of Islam.

"This is not Islam," he added. "This is just one way of escapism so that people don't talk about social and economic issues, hunger, poverty, corruption or mismanagement. Or the fact that billions of dollars are spent on arms and military equipment."

He said Muslims and Muslim nations could no longer afford to be misled by extremism if they wanted to improve living conditions, modernise and compete on an equal footing with the West.

Mr. Anwar, a 43-year-old Malay Muslim who many political analysts see as a future prime minister, said Muslim, as well as Western, countries had ignored "all the excesses you can think of" in Iraq for many years because "they thought that Saddam was the saviour of the Arabs when he fought the Iranians."

He said that the sooner Saddam Hussein was removed from power by the Iraqi people the better. "But knowing a system that is authoritarian, dictatorial and run by military and paramilitary outfits, I feel helpless to say how," he said.

Mr. Anwar added that the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait should teach Muslims a lesson. "We have got to stop playing up the bogey of imperialism or the West or America, and address real central issues confronting Muslim societies," he said.

Those issues, he said, included better education for women as well as men, equality of the sexes, the gap between rich and poor, employment opportunities for women, lack of basic freedom and tolerance, and disregard for human rights.

Mr. Anwar, who represents the moderate face of Islam that has played a key role in the successful economic development of Malaysia and Indonesia, told an international conference of Islamic scholars and intellectuals that ended May 5 that he deplored disunity, hypocrisy, greed and oppression among Muslim countries.

He said that if the more than 40 Muslim nations had opposed the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait, "probably the tragic consequences could have been averted."

Mr. Anwar said a sectarian impulse in the Muslim community had "created innumerable pockets of false loyalties."

He added, "Our narrow interpretation of Islam has resulted in our seclusion from the rest of the world."

Muslims, he said, are marginalised, adding that unless they accept the reality of a pluralistic world, they will continue to be excluded from "the advance technological society" of the West and Japan.

For Malaysia, the Gulf war was unwelcome for many reasons, not least because it pitted Muslim against Muslim, reinforcing an image that many in the West have of Islam as a retrogressive force.

Political opponents of Malaysia's multiracial coalition government led by a Muslim prime minister, Mahathir bin Mohamad, many of them from the country's Muslim majority, condemned his administration for voting in the United Nations Security Council for a resolution that authorised use of force to evict Iraq from Kuwait.

Leaders of the opposition Pan-Malayan Islamic Party, which wants to change Malaysia from secular to an Islamic state, called for volunteers to fight for Mr. Hussein. And the U.S. State Department issued a travel advisory warning Americans to be careful when visiting Malaysia.

Analysts said these developments had cast a shadow over Malaysia's impressive economic achievements. The country's economy grew by nearly 10 per cent in 1990, after adjustment for inflation. Growth was well above 10 per cent in both 1988 and 1989, and another strong performance has been forecast for 1991.

But fallout from the Gulf war raised fears that foreign investment, which has powered Malaysia's rapid growth, might no longer be welcome.

Malaysian officials are now reassuring investors and bankers that the pace of economic liberalisation will be stepped up, no slowed.

In an interview, Mr. Anwar said Malaysia was one of very few countries with a majority Muslim population that supported the U.N. Security Council resolution to force Iraq out of Kuwait "with out mass demonstrations against the U.S. or allied forces."

But he said it was true that when Malaysia decided to back the resolution, the "vast majority" of Muslims in Malaysia were against it.

"This was partly fanned by the opposition Islamic Party, which said that we were with the non-Muslims against the Muslims," he said. "We explained that we were upholding the principle that no country should conquer or annex another country."

A Western diplomat said May 5 that one of Mr. Mahathir's ambitions was "to make Islam in Malaysia synonymous with economic progress and modernisation" and that Mr. Anwar was "dedicated to the same objective."

Until now, Mr. Anwar has been occasionally cast outside the country as an assertive representative of Islamic conservatism.

Mr. Mahathir told an international business conference in March that promotion of fundamental Islamic values of tolerance, hard work and thrift would improve economic performance in Malaysia. He said that Muslim "deviations are anything but Islamic." — The International Herald Tribune.

A new international order?

Francisco Rezek

The writer is the minister of foreign affairs of Brazil. The article is reprinted from the Belgrade-based Review of International Affairs.

THE TIMES we live in are marked by deep transformations bringing existential changes to many. The key question is: will we be a pale replica of history or, on the contrary, capable of affirming the much-lauded modern tendencies and taking advantage of the prospects opening up before us and creating a world of greater prosperity and solidarity and, in that world, a better Brazil.

The Greco-Roman heritage has enriched western civilization. In a retrospective vision, the accumulated achievements are a matter of pride, while at the same time the collective memory is shrouded in black. The extraordinary progress of human thought, art and science did not suffice to prevent the stockpiling of an arsenal that fed confrontation, attempts to impose hegemony and disagreements among people and nations.

The Renaissance that inaugurated the modern epoch by placing man and his ideas of the human community in the forefront; the enlightening dream of republican ideas that had so great an influence on America's independence, on France's revolution, on our appeal from Ipiranga; the Romantic nationalism that produced Italian and German unification; the modernising impulses of the industrial revolution that changed thoroughly the course of modern history — all of this together brought about the present outstanding advancement of technology while simultaneously increasing the differences between rich and poor. These have further been exacerbated by the extreme polarisation of international relations as the consequence of two world wars and the bipolar structure of world power, ideological and Pharisee-like at the political level and discriminatory and protectionist in the economic sphere.

The interests of states and the desire for individual leadership have set the course of history. It is no wonder that Heidegger, causing considerable surprise, regretted the "forgetting of man" as a factor and the primary objective of human evolution.

Today, at the close of an epoch that knew how to build and how to destroy, we again see the rehabilitating winds of our hopes. But we have already learned that progress is not forged on the inertia of historical events. Evolution calls for a majority political will to bring man back to the centre of historical happenings; it calls for a joint effort to surmount the most vital collective problems while producing a new ethnic and transforming the community of nations into a centre of solidarity and quality control of our own actions.

Many of the prospects now opening before us for peace and understanding among nations can be summed up in the cessation of the Cold War, in the disappearance of the Berlin Wall and the wave of democratisation spreading across Latin America and liberating Eastern Europe. This is the achievement of a generation that set itself the goal of improving the life style of a world threatened many times over by universal devastation.

We cannot boast that the improvement in relations between the goods and capital we possess, the unimaginable advancement of science and technology, the shortening of geographic distances and the cultural ties among countries offer proof of new times and new positive attainments at the service of the whole world. The dynamic revolution of this post-industrial revolution seems not to want it to be spread around the world as though the attainments of the human mind need never be the heritage of us all.

The horizons opening before the human race are the product of changes that have led to disarmament and cessation of ideological confrontations, to the multiplication of factors on the world scene and to universality in international relations. In today's democracy, we need to affirm the interests of minorities and freely-expressed legitimate confirmation of real national sovereignty and the political will of citizens.

Civil society, in its everyday manifestations on the streets of our cities, at universities, in parliaments, in courts and in the press, was the first to rebel against the dangers of a nuclear holocaust and the remnants of the arms race. It did so in an attempt to affirm human rights, raise its voice against the denial of freedoms, protest against social injustices, revolt against the destruction of the human environment, protest against ideological Phariseeism and the forgetting of man.

At international level, the modern revolution will be consummated when the majority interest transcends the interests of states and blocs. On this plane, the multiplicity of decision-making centres in contrast to the bipolar structure of power, and deliverance from regional conflicts, reflect the termination of confrontation between East and West. On the other hand, the growing universality of economy intimates that international security will either be collective or it will not be at all. By the same token, economic liberalism will be confirmed as a general practice, without discrimination and protectionism, or, if not, it will become an ordinary mask to conceal retention of the old ways in the differences between North and South.

The end of the Cold War discourages confrontation on geopolitical and geostrategic grounds and we pass from ideological confrontation to political dialogue stimulating international interaction. Today it is possible to imagine the world now having to replace East-West confrontation with a confrontation between prosperity and economic backwardness-struggle between efficiency and development efforts, between the big powers and a weak periphery.

Conflicts which have for decades caused fear on the political scene cannot be attributed only to the bipolar power structure, just as the evils of underdevelopment cannot be ascribed solely to the existence of a post-industrial world. It would be even less just to say the problem confronted by peoples that have just emancipated themselves from authoritarian regimes are due to the great achievements of democratic societies. But there is no doubt that in building a modern life in the 21st century, joint efforts by all countries in a spirit of solidarity will contribute to international security, the spread of prosperity and consolidation of democratic values.

A new international order can have shortcomings by the simple reason of being an order in a period inevitably provocative and revolutionary but it cannot have them by the fact of being international. If that were not the case, it could not be a new international order.

For countries like Brazil the option is clear. The modern world begins with modern societies. Modernity is more a work and labour ethic than it is performance or results. Our re-democratisation effort confirms our political dignity. We have the best possibilities for passing good laws, for managing the interests of nations, since the power we hold was constituted by the will of the people. However, we are only at the beginning of reconstructing and building the country, meaning that we are just at the beginning of affirming our national dignity.

Our future depends on our ability to work, proven in particularly dark periods of Brazilian history; it depends on our ability to understand priority problems, on our ability to promote better mutual understanding among the world's nations, and it particularly depends on our ability to bring to this country the nucleus of great world transformations through which we would protect and pursue our own interests.

The future should be ours, if that is that is what we want

Kurdish autonomy pact expected

(Continued from page 1)

Iraqis should reconsider their apparent rejection of the U.N. police force idea," Mr. Boucher told reporters.

Mr. Boucher said the U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, Thomas Pickering, met Iraqi delegate Abdul Amir Al Anbari Friday in New York and explained "the importance of Iraqi cooperation with the United Nations in this effort."

"As Security Council resolutions have made clear, the international community will be watching Iraq's policies and practices and will judge Iraq accordingly" in determining when to lift crippling sanctions, Mr. Boucher added.

He said specific decisions on what to do next would depend on talks between Iraqi officials and U.N. envoys in the next few days.

Told the only alternative to a U.N. police force appears to be an extended U.S. presence in Iraq, Mr. Boucher replied: "I wouldn't necessarily agree with that ... what happens next depends on a lot of these discussions that are going on, and also on the needs of the refugees."

Bessmertnykh optimistic

(Continued from page 1)

have moved to Israel since 1989, when the Soviet Union eased restrictions on emigration.

Mr. Bessmertnykh defended Moscow's policy of allowing Jews to emigrate, saying it was a natural internal development.

"This is the product of our democratisation. And it is not directed only to one area but open to all areas," he said.

Moscow, he said, had a special interest in Middle East peace because it was concerned about Soviet Jews settling in Israel.

Mr. Bessmertnykh also said Moscow, which has rejected Israeli demands to renew ties as a precondition for acting as co-sponsor of a conference, was moving towards restoring ties with the Jewish state. He gave no date.

"We are approaching that moment. But that moment is still in the future," he said.

On Palestinian representation, he repeated the Soviet position that it was up to the Palestinians themselves to decide who should represent them.

Israel refuses to deal with the Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO).

Mr. Bessmertnykh said he still hoped to meet PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat soon but gave no date or place. A meeting scheduled in Amman on Thursday was postponed, mainly for logistical reasons.

Egyptian Foreign Minister Esmat Abdul Meguid said Cairo believed a Soviet role was essential in any peace talks.

"The Soviet Union has an important role in the peace process which I think is very much welcome in Egypt," he told reporters.

After talks with Mr. Abdul Meguid and Minister of State for Foreign Affairs Boutros Ghali, Mr. Bessmertnykh told reporters he would visit Saudi Arabia on Monday.

Moscow and Riyadh restored relations last September, at the height of the Gulf crisis. Mr. Bessmertnykh's visit would be the first by a Soviet foreign minister to the kingdom.

GCC to join talks with Israel

(Continued from page 1)

observer, represented by the GCC secretary-general," he told reporters.

Mr. Baker said actual peace talks with Israel would be limited to the front-line Arab states, such as Jordan and Syria. He called the notion alone of Arabs and Israelis negotiating a "break-through."

As to the GCC states negotiating subsidiary matters such as arms control, environmental matters and water resources, Mr. Khater said, the GCC members "would have no objection to attending and discussing such issues."

He spoke after a meeting of the European Community (EC) and GCC foreign ministers. In a communique, the two sides said of Mr. Baker's drive for peace.

"They fully support this initiative and the process envisaged which should enable negotiations between Israel and its Arab neighbours and between Israel and the Palestinians."

Until Saturday, Saudi Arabia had said it would not attend any peace conference.

The turnaround was interpreted as a major boost for Mr. Baker's latest mission, seen by many as his last in this series of attempts.

Mr. Poes, citing the EC's economic and political clout, told reporters the EC wants to participate "actively" to the peace conference and rejected an observer status.

"We feel the community should play the same role as the Soviet Union," he said. "Mr. Baker wants the Soviets to co-sponsor a peace conference with the United States."

The EC's status at a conference was discussed Tuesday in Brussels between the EC foreign ministers and David Levy, their Israeli counterpart.

Israel wants the Europeans to have an observer role at best in a peace conference.

The EC and the GCC said Saturday any Middle East peace must be based on U.N. resolutions urging Israel to return land taken during the 1967 war in exchange for peace and recognition from its Arab neighbours.

Dutch Foreign Minister Hans van den Broek said the EC told the GCC Israel and its neighbours must take "confidence building measures" to guarantee the success of a peace conference.

Israel, he said, must end its settlements in the occupied territories and its Arab neighbours must end a boycott of Western companies doing business with the Jewish state. Saudi Foreign Minister Prince Saud Al Faisal "made clear the Arab World had been forthcoming but the same could not be said of Israel," said Mr. Van den Broek.

Israeli welcome

Israeli officials cautiously welcomed reports that the GCC states would abandon their four-decade long boycott of the Jewish state to sit at a Middle East peace table.

"It is certainly good news, and we are glad," said Yossi Olmert, director of the government press office.

But Mr. Olmert, reached by telephone, said Israel awaited confirmation of the report from Gulf countries before official statements would be issued.

Olmert responded to Mr. Baker's remarks in Shannon, Ireland, that the GCC states had agreed to break a "major taboo" and negotiate with Israel at a peace conference.

A senior Israeli official confirmed that the idea of the Saudis joining a second stage of talks on regional issues, "was always in the air," during Mr. Baker's talks in Israel.

The EC and the GCC also pledged to quickly conclude a free trade agreement, a goal that has eluded them in six years of negotiations. The issue gained in political significance for the EC as it seeks to increase its profile in the Middle East in the wake of the Gulf war.

Luxembourg Foreign Minister Jacques Poes, whose country currently holds the EC presidency, restated the EC view here a free trade accord with the GCC would be part of its contribution to bring peace and stability to the Middle East after the Gulf war.

The EC seeks a role in a Middle East peace conference. Parallel to that, it wants to help Middle East states economically.

Bangladesh storm survivors say nothing can rebuild their lives

By Anis Ahmed Reuter

MAHESHKHALI, Bangladesh — Hundreds of survivors of Bangladesh's worst cyclone huddle in flickering lamplight by the ruins of their homes on Maheshkhali island, listening to barking dogs feeding on bloated corpses nearby.

"I am just one of the living dead, please leave me alone," said Islam Matbar Hoarsley, his eyes red from lack of sleep since the cyclone struck on April 29, killing more than 125,000 Bangladeshis.

"Why us, ob Allah?" he asked.

The cyclone hit at Matbar, the island's richest man, was holding a wedding feast for his son. Of about 100 people at the feast only he, the bride and the groom escaped death.

"I have been left to mourn for the rest of my life," Matbar said, squatting out of the wind and rain under the corrugated roof of his flattened home.

He was one of several hundred people sitting by wrecked homes, telling of their ordeals.

The storm killed at least 15,000 people in Maheshkhali, a rich fishing island 12 miles from the mainland resort of Cox's Bazar.

"They must be having a feast on the corpses," said one islander, shivering from the cold and pointing at the pack of harking dogs on the shore. "It is like hell."

"I suppose no help is enough to rebuild our shattered lives, no sympathy is enough to make up our losses," Matbar muttered as winds from the Bay of Bengal lifted his flowing beard.

In the Maheshkhali channel between Cox's Bazar and the island, vultures and crows pecked at floating bodies.

"Four of the seven teachers in my school have died," said an island headmaster.

Half of those who survived the storm have left their homes to join a fast-growing army of beggars crowding Chittagong port and other cities across the country.

"I cannot join them. My heart bleeds if I think of such a prospect," said 50-year-old Matbar.

Government officials in the capital Dhaka say the death toll from the cyclone has reached more than 125,000. Others in the affected areas say the final toll could be a quarter of a million.

"Around 30,000 people have died in the Cox's Bazar district alone," said Abdullah Al Noman, minister of state for fisheries, livestock and environment.

The district administrator of Chittagong, Abdur Rah Khan, said nearly 80,000 people had been killed in his district alone and more reports of casualties were coming in.

More than 10,000 others were confirmed dead in coastal districts of Noakhali, Bhola, Patuakhali and on nearly a dozen offshore islands which were swept by 20-foot tidal waves whipped up by the 145 mile per hour storm.

The Maheshkhali islanders said relief supplies had started arriving in "good volume" but that distribution had not been streamlined.

Lack of coordination between government and private agencies meant some victims were being given supplies twice a day while others received nothing, they said.

Relief worker Shahabuddin Ahmed said the agencies were trying to overcome the problem.

The stretch of rotting bodies sickens new arrivals to the area.

"But we are here," said Shamsul Islam, a doctor with a relief team.

He said food, water and medical supplies arriving now would probably save most of the survivors in the "immediate aftermath of the disaster."

"The real crisis will begin when the flood of sympathy starts receding," he told Reuters. Similar fears were expressed by Minister Al Noman.

"We must be more worried about ultimate survival," he said in an interview.

Diseases have already broken out in Maheshkhali and other affected areas, but doctors said they had seen no cases of cholera.

"We don't rule out such a possibility but so far there is no confirmed case," said one doctor in Maheshkhali.

"The worst problem now is that the survivors are not helping to bury the dead," said Jamil Chowdhury, a coordinator of relief efforts.

"This is perhaps because some people think they will get assistance as long as the evidence of the tragedy is around," he said.

Others differed. "Most survivors are so badly overtaken by shock that they can hardly think of anything now," said an official in Cox's Bazar.

Every year, some 250,000 visitors come from all over the world to see the battlefield where tens of thousands of soldiers perished in only a few hours. Photo shows Waterloo, the Lion Mound.

Waterloo, 175 years after the battle

ONE hundred and seventy five years after one of the greatest battles in history, Waterloo is still a magnet to hundreds of thousands of tourists. It was on this very spot that Napoleon's 70,000 soldiers fought with 110,000 English, Prussian, Dutch and Belgian troops on 18th June 1815. This is the place where the great strategist lost his final battle.

On 17th June 1990, 2,500 people carried out a spectacular reenactment of the battle. This event once again placed Waterloo in the headlines, but a great deal of work had also been going on behind the scenes to improve the image of the world's most famous battlefield.

11.30 a.m. The Château de Hougoumont was attacked, captured and recaptured several times and finally set on fire. At 1.30 p.m. Marshal Ney sent the French cavalry into the fray and attacked the centre of the British forces at La Haie Sainte. However he was unable to break through their lines, and at 4.30 p.m. the Prussian army joined the battle. An hour later, Ney had conquered La Haie Sainte, but it was then that Marshal Blücher appeared on the scene with 60,000 men. The allies unleashed a spectacular counter-offensive which forced the French army to retreat. Ney tried to regroup his troops to launch a final attack, but he was unsuccessful, and by 9.30 p.m. Wellington and Blücher were meeting at the farm at La Belle Alliance to celebrate their victory. This great battle was the final nail in the coffin of an empire spanning a large part of Europe, conquered by Napoleon the Great, Emperor of the French.

But many people are unimpressed by the sometimes trivial fashion in which this major battle is presented to tourists. Since the World War II, a growing number of small, ill-assorted shops and tourist centres of dubious architectural merit have been built around the Mound. What kind of impression does this desolate plain make on, say, a Japanese visitor? What do they think of all the posters, chip shops and tawdry souvenirs?

Over recent years, dozens of organisations have been fighting for the survival of this historic monument. The King Baudouin Foundation is striving to redesign the layout of the area and to improve public awareness of its historical importance.

Apart from the battlefield itself, there is also the surrounding area to be considered. The foundation has therefore taken on the task of redesigning the whole of this impressive site.

In 1988, the King Baudouin Foundation followed in William I's footsteps by holding an international competition for plans to remodel the battlefield, in conjunction with the Battle of Waterloo 1815 Association. Entrants were invited to submit plans for the layout of the area surrounding the historic site of the battle.

The Foundation imposed six basic requirements to maintain the dignity of the site. The battlefield itself was to be totally protected. The layout must respect the need for historical accuracy and the educational aspect of the site; it must be a pleasant place for visitors, and it must follow the principles of aesthetics and good taste.

More than two hundred plans were received from Germany, the United Kingdom, Belgium, France, the Netherlands, Denmark, Italy, Spain, Greece and Portugal. The idea was not to produce a specific design, but to develop a practical outline layout for this historic site.

Re-design

Less than two years after the competition, an ultra-modern tourist centre has been built at the foot of the Lion Mound. Here the battle is described to visitors using animated graphics and film and sound recordings. The plan for the redesign of the surrounding area and its architecture has also recently been put forward. The battlefield area, already partially protected under a law passed on 26th March 1914, is to be extended, making it easier to visualise the positions occupied by the main forces in the battle. Once again, Waterloo will fire the imagination of thousands of visitors.

The above article was provided by the Ministry for Foreign Affairs, External Trade and Cooperation for Development, Brussels-Belgium.

California condor hatches at zoo

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A California condor chick pecked out of its aqua-coloured shell at the Los Angeles Zoo, the seventh condor hatching at the zoo this year, an official said Friday.

The 6½-ounce (182 gram) chick hatched Tuesday, after 58 days of incubation, said zoo bird curator Michael Wallace. The chick's sex will be determined in three months. "The offspring is healthy and feeding well on minced mice," said Wallace. Two more eggs are incubating at the Los Angeles Zoo and two are expected to hatch this spring at the San Diego Wild Animal Park. The two facilities currently house all 49 known California condors. Zoo officials plan to meet with geneticists in June to determine whether the 11 breeding pairs have enough genetically different young among them release some of the vultures into the wild. The last wild California condors were captured in 1987 in an effort to breed them in captivity and increase their numbers. At the time, the species had dwindled to just 27 birds as a result of poachers, pollution and the condor's consumption of hunters' lead shot.

JORDAN MARKET PLACE

THE PROFESSIONALS ALWAYS CHOOSE THE RELIABLE

PACKING, AIR FREIGHT FORWARDING, DOOR-TO-DOOR SERVICES AND DELIVERIES, CUSTOMS CLEARANCE, TICKETS AND RESERVATIONS.

AMIN KAWAR & SONS
TEL: 604576 604696
P.O. BOX 7806 AMMAN

4 Rent & Sale

Many villas and apartments are available for rent and sale - furnished or unfurnished.

Also many lots of land are available for sale.

For further details, please call

Abdoun Real Estate
Tel: 610605, 610608, Fax: 610520

Ricardo

Amman's exclusive gift shop

Italian shoes, leather goods, perfumes, lighters, watches, pens, silverware, porcelain, crystalware etc.

Shmeisani - Grindlays Bank Bldg.
Tel: 669 457

STUDIO HAIG

Professional Quality in 1 Hour Service

Develop your colour film at our shop and get:-

- JUMBO photo size 30% larger
- Free enlargement 20 x 30 cm

Shmeisani - Opp. Grindlays Bank. Phone: 604042
Sweifeh tel: 823891

RENT Saudi Real Estate

Furnished & unfurnished apartments & villas for rent in West Amman area.

CALL SOHA Rental Dept. 687821/22

FOR RENT

DELUXE & SUPER DELUXE APARTMENTS, VILLAS & SEMI VILLAS

GET THE BEST AT

JAMAL REAL ESTATE
JUST CALL 835859

CROWN INT'L EST.

packing, shipping, forwarding, storage, clearing, door-to-door service

Agents all over the world
Tel: 684890, Fax: 688852
P.O. Box 22647 AMMAN JORDAN

RESTAURANT CHINA

The first & best Chinese Restaurant in Jordan

1st Circle, Jabal Amman, near Alhithyah Girls School

Take away is available

Open daily 12:00-3:30 p.m.
6:30-Midnight
Tel: 628968

PEKING RESTAURANT

AUTHENTIC CHINESE CUISINE

elegant atmosphere moderate prices

shmeisani - tel: 600250 (closed on Mondays)

CHEN'S CHINESE RESTAURANT

Mecca Street, Yarmouk Engineers' Housing Estate, near Kilo Supermarket

Mongolian Barbeque for Lunch Friday only

Tel: 818214

Come and taste our specialties

Open daily 12:00 - 3:30 p.m.
6:30 - Midnight

Kashmir Restaurant

FIRST CLASS INDIAN RESTAURANT

Special Executive Lunches

Take away service available

Open Daily 12.30-3.30 pm
7.30-11.30 pm

After the Philadelphia Hotel Towards 3rd circle
Tel: 659519-659520

Steak House FOR THE BEST AMERICAN

STEAKS IN TOWN

T-BONE SERLOIN FILLET

MANY KINDS OF STEAKS

Mecca Street - Jaber Center
Tel: 829064 - 829065

The First Class Hotel in Amman that has a Kitchenette in every room...

DAROTEL

Amman - Tel: 668193
P.O. Box 9403 - Fax 602434
Telex 23888 DAROTL JO

Ideal Residence For Expatriates and Businessmen

فندق ريجنسي بالاس The Regency Palace Hotel

PRESS CENTER Facilities

Financial Markets Jordan Times in co-operation with Cairo Amman Bank

Currency	CLOSE Date 9/5/91	CLOSE Date 10/5/91
U.S. Dollar in International Markets NEW YORK
Sterling Pound	1.7190	1.7245
Deutsche Mark	1.7305	1.7225
Swiss Franc	1.4620	1.4545
French Franc	5.8550	5.8225
Japanese Yen	138.05	138.65
European Currency Unit	1.1835	1.1954

Currency	1 MTH	3 MTH	6 MTH	12 MTH
U.S. Dollar	5.87	5.93	6.06	6.50
Sterling Pound	11.87	11.37	11.12	10.93
Deutsche Mark	8.75	8.93	9.12	9.18
Swiss Franc	8.25	8.12	8.25	7.93
French Franc	9.00	9.12	9.12	9.18
Japanese Yen	7.93	7.75	7.62	7.43
European Currency Unit	9.75	9.56	9.56	9.43

Metal	USD/Oz	JD/Gm	Metal	USD/Oz	JD/Gm
Gold	356.85	6.70	Silver	4.04	0.087

Currency	Bid	Offer
U.S. Dollar	0.679	0.683
Sterling Pound	1.1688	1.1758
Deutsche Mark	0.3939	0.3963
Swiss Franc	0.4662	0.4690
French Franc	0.1165	0.1172
Japanese Yen	0.4896	0.4925
Dutch Guilder	0.3497	0.3518
Swedish Krona	0.1099	0.1106
Italian Lira	0.0532	0.0535
Belgian Franc	0.01919	0.01931

Currency	Bid	Offer
Bahraini Dinar	1.7600	1.7800
Lebanese Lira	0.072	0.0745
Saudi Riyal	1.803	1.803
Kuwaiti Dinar
Qatari Riyal	1.840	1.860
Egyptian Pound	1.900	2.050
Omani Riyal	1.7300	1.7700
UAE Dirham	1.832	1.850
Greek Drachma	3.550	3.700
Cypriot Pound	1.4140	1.4435

Index	30/4/91 Close	8/5/91 Close
All-Share	113.62	113.53
Banking Sector	110.13	109.98
Insurance Sector	109.34	111.30
Industry Sector	118.22	118.20
Services Sector	123.31	122.11

Social Security Corporation seeks 'good' ideas, partners for investments in Jordan

By Samir Shafiq
Special to the Jordan Times

AMMAN — The Social Security Corporation (SSC) is more than willing to invest in expanding projects or in setting up new enterprises provided that they show a high level of profitability or an acceptable level of about seven per cent for nationally-needed projects of socio-economic nature, SSC Director-General Mohammad Al Saqqaf said Saturday.

Mr. Saqqaf conceded that the scope of large-scale investments in Jordan was not wide. But he stressed that local or foreign investors could undoubtedly count on the SSC as a partner in capital for any viable and promising venture.

He cemented his offer by pointing out during an interview with the Jordan Times that the corporation was an independent institution "bent neither on government nor personal concerns in its investment policies but rather solely on solid economic analysis and factors."

The SSC, Mr. Saqqaf said, is governed by a 15-member board of directors headed by the minister of labour. The board, which includes Mr. Saqqaf as deputy board chairman, comprises also two members from the Federation of Jordanian Chambers of Commerce, two from the Amman Chamber of Industry, four from the Federation of Labour Unions and five from the ministries of labour, health, industry and trade, finance and the Central Bank of Jordan.

Mr. Saqqaf noted that the board meets regularly once a month and that, more importantly, neither himself nor the board have come under government pressure or directives to follow a certain investment path.

Banks

Unfolding the investment portfolio of the corporation, Mr. Saqqaf, who has served as the secretary-general of the ministries of supply and industry and trade said that SSC investments total about JD 400 million, of which about JD 136 million, or 34 per cent, were bank deposits.

Such an amount of liquidity was necessary to be maintained at all times to run daily operations and meet various payments to beneficiaries in addition to keeping sufficient funds for unforeseen developments, he said.

Mr. Saqqaf regretted that the SSC had so far been unable to establish a bank of its own due to stiff opposition he declined to identify but is suspected to be powerful banking circles.

Housing loans and development bonds

The second portion of investment is also about JD 136 million spread over housing loans to tens of private and public societies, companies, charities and institutions. Included in the amount also are holdings of government development bonds which, according to Mr. Saqqaf, finance nationally-needed development projects.

Shares and stocks

Investments in shares and stocks of public shareholding companies and equity participation in other enterprises ranked in third place for a total of JD 96 million, or 24 per cent.

Mr. Saqqaf said that the third portion of investments covers nearly 100 industrial, agricultural and services entities. He further explained that the SSC was a very active element in boosting the trading at the Amman Financial Market (AFM) after the Gulf war having contributed JD 3 million in AFM turnover within only three weeks.

Hotels and resthouses

The fourth, "controversial," investment is in the tourism sector, which absorbed JD 24 million, about six per cent of the SSC funds.

Estimating the market value of the 12 hotels and resthouses run by the SSC throughout Jordan at JD 60 million, Mr. Saqqaf described this type of investment as controversial because it continues to stir widely different views about the profitability of and services rendered at the hotels and resthouses.

He affirmed that tourism investment yielded a net profit of JD 1 million last year and that prices at the SSC hotels and resthouses, which employ nearly 1,000 workers, were cheap.

However, the director-general said that the SSC was implementing a new strategy in this area where a strict high profitability standard would be applied. As such, he added, the three resthouses at Jerash, Zai and Ishtafena are being offered for lease.

Blaming public unawareness and apathy, Mr. Saqqaf said that only 200 people visited the Ishtafena resthouse last year. But, he cautioned, this example should not mean that the SSC resthouses were failures.

Mr. Saqqaf explained that business at the three small resthouses was seasonal and that they had no lodging facilities, a situation which was burdening the SSC. He asserted that under a more direct and less costly management the resthouses would show greater success noting that the SSC was not selling the resthouses anyhow and would retain direct control over others in the area where lodging was "a good place to spend a vacation."

Real estate

The fifth and last area in the SSC investment portfolio was a JD 8 million real estate section, a two per cent portion of total investments.

"The real estate business is more valuable as money augments in value in land and buildings and the SSC plans to expand its holdings in this field," Mr. Saqqaf emphasised.

He referred in this regard to a plot of land in Wadi Saqra street where a big shopping centre would be an "excellent SSC asset" in the future noting that the purchase of the present SSC headquarters in Wadi Saqra in the past was "a very wise decision."

The director-general also outlined to the Jordan Times some of the projects which the SSC was currently considering.

First, he said, the corporation was looking whether it is feasible and viable to financially shore up five "troubled" industries and, secondly, the possibility of setting up a fodder factory.

Dead Sea

At still more preliminary stages are building two major hospitals in Amman and Irbid and building a spa at the Dead Sea.

"The two hospitals will each cost about JD 15 million and will be set up in cooperation with prominent private sector doctors to operate on commercial basis because a study has shown that within three to four years and due to high population increase Jordan's present hospitals would be unable to cope with the situation," Mr. Saqqaf said.

"The Dead Sea spa project will cost JD 12 million and will include a minimum of 10 per cent German equity. The Germans would also guarantee an annual 55 per cent occupancy rate for 10 years," he added.

Mr. Saqqaf explained that certain skin diseases were only allowed by the German authorities for treatment in a place in Switzerland and at the Dead Sea. As such, the Germans made the spa hotel offer to the SSC noting that similar profitable projects were set up on the other side of the Dead Sea.

Experience

Asked about the difference between holding "theoretical" posts at the Ministry of Supply and the Ministry of Industry and Trade and the "implementation" post at SSC, Mr. Saqqaf gave the example of a project to manufacture spare parts in Jordan.

Social Security Corporation (SSC) Director-General Mohammad Al Saqqaf (right) says that prices at SSC's hotels and resthouses, such as Aqaba (top) and Dibe'en (below) are really cheap and the facilities there fulfil a weekend's vacation.

He said that had he been at the ministries he would have been all out in support of the project but being the SSC head he realised that the project couldn't have a chance to succeed.

Finally, Mr. Saqqaf noted that the SSC targets maximising its investment income as much as possible or else it would be disastrous for the Kingdom in the future. He reaffirmed the readiness of the corporation to financially back investments in Jordan, even indirectly through the Industrial Development Bank with which the SSC is discussing possible additional equity through a capital increase as the corporation's usual participation is limited to a 20 per cent stake in any single entity.

Brazilians celebrate fall of economy minister

RIO DE JANEIRO (R) — Brazilians toasted the departure of Zelia Cardoso de Mello, the economy minister who blocked most of their savings, sent the value of their wages crashing — and still failed to kill inflation.

"I was so happy to hear she was leaving," said Adnil da Silva Cavatte, enjoying a drink with friends at a pavement cafe Friday. "With Zelia you never knew what was coming tomorrow."

Raising her glass of beer, she said: "Here's hoping our crueldos are unblocked quickly," referring to Cardoso's first act as minister last year when she froze overnight 80 per cent of Brazil's money in bank accounts.

Cavatte, a self-employed beautician, said her business slumped over the past year as the anti-inflationary measures of Cardoso's austerity programme plunged the country into a deep recession.

On Wednesday evening a tired Cardoso stepped down and the following day her entire economic team handed in their resignations, including central bank chief Ibrahim Eris.

Despite a price freeze in force since Jan. 31, prices have continued to rise by between five and 20 per cent a month. Cardoso blamed a package of fuel and electricity price rises announced at the same time but workers were unconvinced.

"The only thing frozen is salaries," said doorman Alexandre Gomes Oliveira, who supplements his salary worth $165 a month by selling his wife's homemade snacks.

"Zelia said we should negotiate wage increases. But our bosses just say accept what we offer or you're fired," he added.

In front of the local gas company hundreds of striking workers filled the street demanding a big pay raise to make up for what they have lost to rampant inflation.

"We had an 84 per cent rise in January — but that was to cover us for a period when prices went up 1,000 per cent," said striker Mario Neves, who supports a wife and two children on the equivalent of $280 a month.

Like many other Brazilians, Mario has coped with a decline in real wages by taking on a second job, working as a musician. A year ago he took out a loan that bought a washing machine, refrigerator, freezer and a cooker. Today the same amount would not even buy a cooker.

While the middle class can save a little by buying dollars or speculating on the turbulent financial markets, poor Brazilians have nothing left after buying basic necessities.

"We invest in only one thing, our children's education, and even that we can't do very well," said Levy Pereira, another striker. He supplements his income by working overtime six days a week.

Few believe the situation will improve under the new minister, Marcilio Marques Moreira, the former ambassador to Washington. Moreira will be the country's sixth economy minister in just over six years. Cardoso lasted 14 months in office.

The speed of the economy ministry's revolving doors has made Brazilians sceptical that any man or woman can solve the country's huge financial problems.

Kuwait Airways to sue insurance companies

KUWAIT (R) — Kuwait Airways will sue insurance companies for failing to cover part of its losses from the Iraqi occupation of Kuwait, the chairman of the board said in an interview published Saturday.

Chairman Ahmad Hamed Al Mishari told New Dawn newspaper the total loss to the airline was $1.6 billion. It wants the insurance companies to pay $942 million.

This covers the cost of 15 planes confiscated by the Iraqis, damage to and theft from the airline's offices, and spare parts, buses and maintenance equipment, which were all looted, he said.

Mishari said his company and the unnamed insurance companies were in dispute over whether Kuwait Airways should claim for the planes and looted equipment under the theft clauses or the war loss clauses of its policies.

The insurance companies have reimbursed $300 million, saying that is the maximum they can pay for war losses at a single airport, he said.

"But what happened was theft and confiscation...the planes were safe and were flown to Baghdad after the invasion. Thus compensation is due here...for theft," Mishari said.

The airline was preparing its brief to sue the insurance companies for the rest of the $942 million, he added.

Insurance sources in London said Friday that Iraq would hand back the first of the 15 planes, a Boeing 727, Friday in Jordan. But an Iraqi official in Amman said Saturday the plane had not been handed over.

Kuwait Airways is currently operating a fleet of eight planes which escaped the Iraqis. They are four Boeing 747s, three Boeing 727s and one Boeing 767. Mishari said the airline would soon start leasing planes as it needed them and it had asked Boeing and Airbus to submit tenders for new planes.

VACANCY FOR BOOKKEEPER/ACCOUNTANT American Employees Community Service Association May 6, 1991

The American Employees Community Service Association (AECSA) will take applications beginning May 19, through May 30, for a bookkeeper/accountant.

Applicant must:

- Be thoroughly acquainted with generally accepted accounting practices used in American businesses.
- Be computer literate, and able to quickly adapt to the use of ADP accounting.
- Have fluent reading, writing and speaking English.

Applications should be submitted to the American Embassy.
Attn: Administrative Office.

Jordan Times

Tel: 667171

SALE

Second-hand English paperback novels Sunday, 12 May, from 9:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m.

At Dahyat Al Rawda Complex/near Jerusalem Hotel block 1, apartment 112.

Cinema CONCORD Tel: 677420

Kevin Costner, Anthony Quinn
REVENGE

Show: 3:30, 6:15, 8:30, 10:30 p.m.

Cinema PHILADELPHIA Tel: 634144

Micky Rooky
JOHNNY HANDSOME

Show: 12:30, 3:30, 6:15, 8:30, 10:30 p.m.

Cinema NIJOUN Tel: 675571

Fifi Abdo / Adel Adham
Mahmoud Al Jundi
in
NOOR AL UYOON

Show: 12:30, 3:30, 6:30, 8:30, 10:30 p.m.

Cinema RAINBOW Tel: 625155

SEEMS LIKE OLD TIMES

Show: 3:30, 6:30, 8:30 p.m.

JORDAN PHOSPHATE MINES CO., LTD.
Invitation to Tender
10F/91

JPMC announces the invitation to tender no. 10F/91 for the design and procurement of a granulation plant.

The tender documents are available at JPMC offices in Amman supply department until, 2:00 p.m. local time Thursday 20.6.1991. Application for documents should be accompanied by a nonrefundable, fee of JD (40) for each set of tender documents.

The closing date for submission tender is 12:00 hours local time Saturday 29th, June 1991.

S. African police shoot white farmers during squatter clash

JOHANNESBURG (R) — South African police shot and wounded four white farmers Saturday during clashes between landowners and black squatters at a pro-apartheid stronghold.

Witnesses said trouble started shortly after midnight when about 2,000 whites, mainly supporters of the pro-apartheid Conservative Party (CP), gathered at a farm outside Ventersdorp to evict residents of a black squatter camp.

CP spokesman Andries Beyers said police opened fire as they stood in a line between the farmers and the squatters.

"Three farmers were wounded by birdshot while a fourth was shot in the stomach with sharp ammunition," he said.

Witnesses said 10 blacks were injured, some seriously, when balaclava-clad whites managed to evade police at Goedevonden Farm and attack a second squatter camp nearby.

They said most injuries were from stab wounds. The attackers wrecked cars and makeshift houses in the camp before retreating.

The dispute between squatters and farmers started early this year when landless blacks settled on a farm from which they were forcibly removed under apartheid land laws several years ago.

Law and Order Minister Adriaan Vlok cut short a tour of black townships outside Johannesburg to fly to Ventersdorp, a CP bastion and national headquarters of the neo-Nazi Afrikaner Weerstandsbeweging (AWB-Afrikaner Resistance Movement).

AWB leader Eugene Terre Blanche has a farm outside the town in western Transvaal.

Police would not comment on the shooting, but Vlok confirmed that some farmers had been wounded. He said no one was killed.

Army reinforcements, some patrolling on horseback, were called in to help police to keep the peace.

Witnesses said the farmers and their supporters refused to leave the outskirts of the squatter area and brown-shirted members of the AWB threatened journalists and onlookers.

Both the AWB, which demands a white-only homeland, and the CP strongly oppose President F.W. De Klerk's pledge to scrap race segregation laws by next month.

Vlok was inspecting the results of "Operation Stabilise," launched this week to end township violence and rescue South Africa's fragile peace process from collapse, when he decided to head for Ventersdorp.

Police reported that Johannesburg's townships were quiet following months of fighting between rival black factions which has killed about 150 blacks this month alone and at least 1,500 since August.

Vlok has poured extra security forces into the townships and on Thursday De Klerk banned weapons to try to stop the slaughter between supporters of Nelson Mandela's African National Congress (ANC) and the Inkatha Freedom Party of Zulu chief Mangosuthu Buthelezi.

The ban outraged Zulu leaders, whose followers insist on carrying a range of clubs, spears and shields as part of their cultural heritage. Buthelezi and other leaders vowed to defy it.

De Klerk excluded Zulu spears and ceremonial axes from the ban, but this displeased both sides. Inkatha leaders want the exclusion extended to all cultural weapons — the ANC wants both sides disarmed completely.

The ANC threatened to call off power-sharing talks with the government unless the government took steps by last Thursday to end the violence. It is understood to have extended the deadline by a week to monitor the success of "Operation Stabilise."

PERTH, Scotland (R) — British Prime Minister John Major Friday put his Conservative Party on an election footing but sought to play speculation he would call a poll next month.

"The economy is getting better, things are getting better, inflation is falling. Why are people in such a hurry?" Major told reporters during a visit to Scotland.

But in a speech to party loyalists — the same platform on which his predecessor Margaret Thatcher launched three winning election campaigns — Major was in electioneering form.

Election fever increased this week when party chiefs said they were not ruling out any date for an election.

They said an apparent setback in local elections last week had not been so bad after all. The Conservatives would have kept power had it been a national election, they said.

British bookmakers are betting on an October election. Major must call a poll by mid-1992.

Neil Kinnock, leader of the opposition Labour Party, predicted that rising unemployment would probably persuade Major to call a June general election.

Kinnock told a rally in Wales that unemployment was now soaring towards 2.5 million and beyond from the current level of just over two million.

"It will get worse," he said. "Even the government knows that — and it is one of the reasons why we will probably be having a general election next month."

Major said the Conservatives could campaign on good news in the economy and policies to boost health and public services.

He predicted recovery from a sharp recession in coming months and promised a so-called "citizens' charter" to guarantee better value from state-run public services.

Major, who has pledged to create an "opportunity society," said he wanted to harness economic recovery "to see more people with homes, shares and pensions of their own ... more ways into independence and less ties to dependence."

But the man who has brought a new consensus style to British politics after more than a decade of abrasive Thatcherism devoted much of his speech to calling the Labour Party left-wing extremists

Major prepares party for election

SEATTLE, Washington (R) — Thousands of anti-government protesters seized control of one of the main streets in Seattle Saturday, braving repeated tear gas volleys to batter riot police lines with a hail of stones and petrol bombs.

Witnesses said that, faced with a crowd of about 3,000 radical students and workers, the hard-pressed police appeared to be giving way.

Pitched battles were being fought just a few hundred metres from some of the city's main hotels and department stores and the Central Bank. The evening air was thick with acid fumes.

Weeping bystanders held handkerchiefs to their faces.

State radio said demonstrations were also taking place in 11 other cities across South Korea, as the country's latest outbreak of political turmoil entered its third week.

It was triggered by the battering to death of a student demonstrator by riot police in Seoul on April 26.

In the days that followed the killing of Kang Kyung-Dae, 20, at least six sympathisers attempted suicide in protest. Four of them, all young men, have died.

Another youth and a woman student remain in critical condition.

SEUL (R) — Thousands of anti-government protesters seized control of one of the main streets in Seoul Saturday, braving repeated tear gas volleys to batter riot police lines with a hail of stones and petrol bombs.

Witnesses said that, faced with a crowd of about 3,000 radical students and workers, the hard-pressed police appeared to be giving way.

Pitched battles were being fought just a few hundred metres from some of the city's main hotels and department stores and the Central Bank. The evening air was thick with acid fumes.

Weeping bystanders held handkerchiefs to their faces.

State radio said demonstrations were also taking place in 11 other cities across South Korea, as the country's latest outbreak of political turmoil entered its third week.

It was triggered by the battering to death of a student demonstrator by riot police in Seoul on April 26.

In the days that followed the killing of Kang Kyung-Dae, 20, at least six sympathisers attempted suicide in protest. Four of them, all young men, have died.

Another youth and a woman student remain in critical condition.

John Major and economic incompetents. Many of the men wearing tartan kilts, gave Major a standing ovation.

In a region where Thatcher was extremely popular with her right-wing supporters but a liability with an electorate suffering a deep recession, Major was welcomed as a fresh start.

He dwelt on his own achievements since replacing Thatcher last November after a bitter leadership struggle.

At that point, Major said, the Conservatives had been 16 points behind Labour in opinion polls.

They were now ahead and Labour had peaked and could only face decline and election defeat.

Scientists confirm flying rock is meteor

GLATTON, England (AP) — A man gardening in his yard was interrupted by a missile from the heavens, which arrived with all the noise of an air raid. Dr. Robert Hutchinson of the Natural History Museum confirmed Friday that the missile was a meteor — only the fifth known to have fallen in Britain since World War II. In fact, it may have sounded like World War II to 80-year-old Arthur Pettifer. He told police the 3-inch (7-cm) round meteor arrived Sunday with a "very loud whistling, whining screaming noise." "I was amazed," the retired civil servant said. "I was doing some gardening when I heard a terrific noise followed by a thud and there it was in my hedge." "Fancy something coming all those miles and landing in my garden," he said. Hutchinson said the black, pitted meteor probably came from beyond Mars. Pettifer said he would probably let the Natural History Museum keep the meteor, and that Hutchinson promised, if the museum gets the cosmic missile, to name it the Glatton meteorite, after the town 40 miles (65 kms) north of London where Pettifer lives.

Soviet troops withdraw from Armenian village after ambush

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet troops withdrew from the terrified Armenian village of Paravakar Saturday after firing warning shots from tanks and helicopters to force the villagers to give up their hunting rifles. Armenian officials said.

Scores of heavily-armed troops surrounded and disarmed the tiny village of 300 people Friday after Armenian militants ambushed a nearby troop column, killing one soldier and wounding eight, according to Soviet media reports.

Armenian officials described the military action against Paravakar as a reprisal for the ambush. It was unclear whether the troops believed villagers had participated in the ambush, which has the first major act of resistance by Armenian militants in two weeks of fighting along the tense, 1,000-kilometre border between Armenia and the neighbouring Soviet Republic of Azerbaijan.

At least 48 Armenians have died in a two-week campaign by Soviet troops and Azerbaijani riot police to disarm Armenian border settlements. Before Friday's ambush, there had been isolated incidents of sniper fire against the Soviets and Azerbaijanis, but no major resistance.

Bella Harutunian-Kozak, an

Armenian Interior Ministry spokeswoman, said the troops collected only five hunting rifles from Paravakar, which is along the border 140 kilometres north-east of Yerevan, the Armenian capital.

The soldiers initially did not believe that the five old rifles were all the weapons in the village. Mrs. Harutunian-Kozak said in a telephone interview.

"They insisted the village had heavy arms, such as grenade launchers, and they began firing from tanks and helicopters to scare the people," she said.

The soldiers first fired blanks, then changed to live ammunition to raise the pressure on the village. Windows were shattered throughout the hamlet and the roofs of several homes were damaged, but no casualties were reported, she said.

According to Soviet media accounts, Armenian militants using rifles and grenades ambushed two Soviet military trucks at dawn Friday in Akstafa province of northwest Azerbaijan, about 3 kilometres from the Armenian border.

Eight of the 14 soldiers riding in the trucks were wounded, and a ninth died before reaching a hospital. Two of the wounded were in critical condition, the Azerbaijani News Agency, Assarada said.

A few hours after the ambush, Soviet troops crossed the border into Armenia, surrounded Paravakar with 11 armoured vehicles and six helicopters, and demanded that it turn over all its weapons, according to Hrutun Khachaturian, another Armenian Interior Ministry official.

Soviet Interior Minister Boris Pugo claimed this week the campaign to disarm Armenian militants was aimed at restoring peace. But Armenian President Levon Ter-Petrosian called it an attempt by Soviet and Azerbaijani authorities to "terrorise the Armenian people" into leaving disputed areas.

Ter-Petrosian also contended that the joint Soviet-Azerbaijani military actions were intended to punish Armenia for trying to secede from the Soviet Union.

He and other Armenian officials have said that the central government in Moscow is siding with Azerbaijan because it remains a loyal Communist republic, while Armenia has nationalised Communist Party property and refused to sign President Mikhail Gorbachev's new union treaty.

One by one, more than half a dozen Armenian settlements on both sides of the border have been seized and disarmed by Soviet army and Interior Ministry troops.

Romanians mark 125th anniversary of start of monarchy

BUCHAREST (AP) — More than 7,000 people rallied Friday to mark 125 years since the inception of Romania's monarchy. The event turned into a protest against President Ion Iliescu and the government.

Waving pictures of ex-monarchs Carol I and Michael, the demonstrators shouted "down with Iliescu," "down with communism" and "let the king come home."

The rally took place in Revolution Square, where security forces shot into demonstrators during the December 1989 uprising that ousted the Communists from power.

As speakers addressed the crowd, royalists called for the resignation of Iliescu, whom they accuse of harbouring totalitarian views.

Most of the speakers demanded that the monarchy, which ended abruptly in 1947, be reinstated in Romania.

"Monarchy is a nightmare for this government ... it robs them of sleep," said Aurel Golimas, president of the Liberal Monarchist Party, which organised the rally.

Sixty-nine-year-old Larisa Gura said she remembers "it was better in the king's times."

"We had enough food and did not have to queue for everything," she said. "I'd love the king to come back and rule again."

Other organisers expressed hope their demonstration could make the king return to Romania. "It can have a big echo if more people turn up," said Octavian Radulescu of the former Political Prisoners Association.

On May 10, 1866, Carol I of the German house of Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen was crowned prince of Romanian principalities. He was crowned King of Romania in 1881.

Protesters, police clash in Seoul, Pusan

SEUL (R) — Thousands of anti-government protesters seized control of one of the main streets in Seoul Saturday, braving repeated tear gas volleys to batter riot police lines with a hail of stones and petrol bombs.

Witnesses said that, faced with a crowd of about 3,000 radical students and workers, the hard-pressed police appeared to be giving way.

Pitched battles were being fought just a few hundred metres from some of the city's main hotels and department stores and the Central Bank. The evening air was thick with acid fumes.

Weeping bystanders held handkerchiefs to their faces.

State radio said demonstrations were also taking place in 11 other cities across South Korea, as the country's latest outbreak of political turmoil entered its third week.

It was triggered by the battering to death of a student demonstrator by riot police in Seoul on April 26.

In the days that followed the killing of Kang Kyung-Dae, 20, at least six sympathisers attempted suicide in protest. Four of them, all young men, have died.

Another youth and a woman student remain in critical condition.

SEUL (R) — Thousands of anti-government protesters seized control of one of the main streets in Seoul Saturday, braving repeated tear gas volleys to batter riot police lines with a hail of stones and petrol bombs.

Witnesses said that, faced with a crowd of about 3,000 radical students and workers, the hard-pressed police appeared to be giving way.

Pitched battles were being fought just a few hundred metres from some of the city's main hotels and department stores and the Central Bank. The evening air was thick with acid fumes.

Weeping bystanders held handkerchiefs to their faces.

State radio said demonstrations were also taking place in 11 other cities across South Korea, as the country's latest outbreak of political turmoil entered its third week.

It was triggered by the battering to death of a student demonstrator by riot police in Seoul on April 26.

In the days that followed the killing of Kang Kyung-Dae, 20, at least six sympathisers attempted suicide in protest. Four of them, all young men, have died.

Another youth and a woman student remain in critical condition.

SEUL (R) — Thousands of anti-government protesters seized control of one of the main streets in Seoul Saturday, braving repeated tear gas volleys to batter riot police lines with a hail of stones and petrol bombs.

Witnesses said that, faced with a crowd of about 3,000 radical students and workers, the hard-pressed police appeared to be giving way.

Pitched battles were being fought just a few hundred metres from some of the city's main hotels and department stores and the Central Bank. The evening air was thick with acid fumes.

Weeping bystanders held handkerchiefs to their faces.

State radio said demonstrations were also taking place in 11 other cities across South Korea, as the country's latest outbreak of political turmoil entered its third week.

It was triggered by the battering to death of a student demonstrator by riot police in Seoul on April 26.

In the days that followed the killing of Kang Kyung-Dae, 20, at least six sympathisers attempted suicide in protest. Four of them, all young men, have died.

Another youth and a woman student remain in critical condition.

2 paintings stolen from Dublin exhibitions

DUBLIN, Ireland (AP) — Two paintings by Irish artists Jack B. Yeats and Paul Henry were stolen from separate exhibitions in Dublin and police said one thief may have taken both. The Henry landscape of Lough Corrib, valued at 10,000 Irish pounds ($15,000), was taken Wednesday from the Oriel Gallery. Yeats' Dublin Scene, Shelling Peas in Moore Street, valued at more than £50,000 ($75,000), was stolen from an exhibition at the Guinness Hop Store Museum. "Both pictures could be easily concealed, the frame was left behind in each case and the closeness of the thefts suggests it was the same thief," said a police spokesman. He added that Dublin art thefts were uncommon, "perhaps no more than once a year." Yeats, who died in 1957 and was the brother of poet W.B. Yeats, was an Expressionist painter and is regarded as the most important Irish 20th century artist. Henry, who died in 1958, is the most admired Irish landscapist of modern times.

Winnie Mandela trial ends; verdict expected next week

JOHANNESBURG (R) — The trial of anti-apartheid leader Winnie Mandela for kidnap and assault ended Friday with her lawyer asking the judge to ignore the prosecution's "mess of evidence" and acquit her on all charges.

Judge M.S. Stegmann adjourned until Monday when he is expected to start delivering his verdict, which could take several days to read.

"A consistent, logical story has been placed before your lordship (by Mrs. Mandela). Why must the mess of evidence ... placed before your lordship by the state witnesses be accepted?" attorney George Bizos asked the judge.

"We submit that she should be found not guilty and discharged on all counts."

A relieved-looking Mandela, dressed in a brightly-coloured tribal costume and turban, was hugged by her lawyers after Bizos ended his summing-up. The trial began on Feb. 4.

The state accuses Mandela, wife of African National Congress (ANC) Deputy President Nelson Mandela, of kidnapping four anti-apartheid activists from a church hostel two years ago and assaulting them in store rooms behind her home.

The charges against Mandela, her driver John Morgan and Xoliswa Falati, a housekeeper at the Methodist-run hotel, allege the four were abducted on suspicion of being police spies.

Mandela and the others deny the charges, saying the four, including 14-year-old Stompie Seipei, came to stay at Mandela's house because they wanted to get away from the homosexual advances of the white minister in charge of the hostel.

Seipei died and Mandela's senior bodyguard, Jerry Richardson, was last year sentenced to hang for his murder.

Stegmann said Friday Mandela's driver had given contradictory, incoherent and improbable evidence.

"I am satisfied Morgan has deliberately set out to misinform us with untruths," he said.

In his final statement to the court, Bizos said that two of the complainants in the case, Kenneth Kgase and Barend Mono, had given contradictory and unsatisfactory evidence.

Bizos said that the prosecution had failed to prove that Kgase, Mono, Seipei and another activist had stayed at Mandela's house against their will.

"Even if it were to be conceded, which we don't, that they remained on the premises against their will, it has not been shown that Mrs. Mandela had knowledge that such a stay was against their will," he added.

Prosecutor Jan Swanepoel said the activists were clearly held at Mandela's house under close watch by her bodyguards and that they had no chance to escape.

U.N. team arrives to inspect Cambodian truce

BANGKOK (AP) — A United Nations military team travels to a Khmer Rouge guerrilla base Sunday to check adherence to a truce that appears to be holding in Cambodia despite accusations of violations.

The leader of the four-man team, Gen. Timothy Dubeau of Ghana, was to arrive in Bangkok Saturday.

"The purpose is to visit the military headquarters of each (Cambodian) faction for an on-the-spot review of the situation" since the truce started May 1, said a U.N. official who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Other members of the team dispatched by U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar are French and Indonesian officers.

On Sunday, the team is to cross the eastern Thai border to a Khmer Rouge guerrilla base inside Cambodia. On Monday, it is to inspect bases of the other groups in the guerrilla coalition — the forces of Prince Norodom Sihanouk and of the Khmer People's National Liberation Front.

The team goes Tuesday to Phnom Penh to hear the government side.

France, Indonesia and the U.N. secretary-general — the main brokers of the Cambodian peace process — proposed the ceasefire to improve chances for an agreement at peace talks expected in Indonesia by early June.

Western diplomats and Thai military officers say the truce generally is holding, although the Phnom Penh government and some of the guerrillas continue trading accusations of violations. It is the first truce in 12 years of war.

Phnom Penh Prime Minister Hun Sen said his forces were remaining in their quarters,

China declines to renounce force against Taiwan

PEKING (R) — China said Saturday it would not renounce the possible use of force against Taiwan, but its goal was still peaceful reunification with the Nationalist-controlled island.

"In reunifying China we must insist on peaceful methods," the official People's Daily said in a commentary.

"Our not committing ourselves to renouncing military force is certainly not aimed at the Taiwan people but at foreign interference and 'Taiwan independence'."

Taipei's nationalist government, which fled to Taiwan in 1949 after Communist victory on the mainland, still claims to be the legitimate ruler of China. Peking, for its part, insists that Taiwan is an inalienable part of China.

A number of native Taiwanese in recent years have lobbied for the island to declare independence, something considered sedition by both Taipei and Peking.

The newspaper urged that direct mail, trade, air and shipping services be established between China and Taiwan as soon as possible to bring the two sides together.

It praised Taiwan's recent formal ending of more than four decades of emergency provisions against China. Taipei cancelled the "period of mobilisation to suppress the Communist rebellion," paving the way for closer relations.

But the paper lashed out at what it said was Taiwan's attempt to gain international acceptance as a "parallel political entity."

It also said the Nationalist government should have no illusions about trying to transform China with its capitalist system.

"All these are unrealistic and will get nowhere," it said.

Tension between Taiwan and China has eased since the late 1980s. Tens of thousands of Taiwanese have visited China on family visits, and indirect trade and investment through third countries are booming.

In a separate development, China cracked down on a group that published articles in praise of democracy movements, banning its publication, disbanding the organisation and purging its leaders of the Legal Daily said Saturday.

As the second anniversary of the June 4, 1989, military suppression of a mass pro-democracy movement approaches, China has tightened control of dissidents and increased violence on campuses, Chinese sources said.

The official newspaper said that security organs had recently "investigated and punished" a group called the Artistic Talents Research Branch of the China Talents Research Association.

Its publication had carried a reappraisal of the 1978 Democracy and Human Rights Democracy Wall Movement which was suppressed by the Communist government a year later. It also praised "the so-called brilliant leaders of the spring 1989 (pro-democracy) disturbances," the newspaper said.

"The group had an abominable influence on society," the newspaper said.

It did not provide details of how many people were involved or what punishment they received, other than to say that the publication had been banned and the organisation stopped and "rectified," the term used to describe a purge.

After the military crushed the 1989 student-led movement, thousands of people were arrested and scores jailed for long terms.

An unknown number are still being detained without trial, according to diplomatic, human rights and Chinese sources.

Meanwhile after turning socialism upside down in China's southern Guangdong province, Governor Ye Xuanping has finally been forced out of office by Peking, but his successor is committed to his bold policies of economic reform, analysts said Saturday.

Ye resigned Friday after a long struggle with Peking leaders who diplomats said felt threatened by the power he had amassed in Guangdong, which borders Hong Kong and has adopted many of the British colony's free-wheeling capitalist ways. The province has the highest living standards in China.

The 67-year-old son of late head of state Marshal Ye Jianying had been governor of Guangdong since 1985. Before that he was mayor of the provincial capital, Canton, and vice governor of the province.

The New China News Agency gave no reason for the resignation in its announcement late Friday.

However Ye made no secret of the fact that he wanted to keep his job and diplomats and analysts said he had won a victory in the choice of his successor. 61-year-old Zhu Senlin, his right-hand man and a firm proponent of market-oriented economic reforms.

"I think there must have been a deal struck such that a reformer was kept very firmly in control of Guangdong," said John Kamm, a former chairman of the Hong Kong American Chamber of Commerce.

"Zhu is a respected, pro-reform leader," he said.

Zhu, formerly secretary of the Communist Party Committee of Canton, was made acting governor.

Lump turns out to be baby

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Sally Bellando didn't crave ice cream and pickles, and didn't morning sickness. She did have abdominal swelling, but feared that was a sign her cancer had returned. Then she gave birth by Caesarean section to a 5-pound, 14-ounce (2.64-kilogram) baby girl, Shauna Christine Bellando. "She's a special little baby, definitely meant to be born. She certainly is welcome," Mrs. Bellando said Friday in a telephone interview from Alta Bates-Herrick Hospital in Berkeley. The pregnancy was discovered Monday after her internist, believing the cancer might have returned and spread, ordered a cat scan of Mrs. Bellando's midsection. The baby was born the next day, four weeks premature. The infant, Mrs. Bellando's first, will remain hospitalised several weeks for observation but so far hasn't shown any ill effects of her mother's cancer treatments, said hospital spokeswoman Carol Regalado. The baby, however, does have a blood sugar problem possibly related to her mother's diabetes, Regalado said. Mrs. Bellando, 39, believed she was left sterile by chemotherapy treatment she was receiving to treat breast cancer that was diagnosed in 1989.

AND TO ALL WE SAY:
we are open
ON MONDAY'S
open daily for lunch and dinner shemisani - tel. 660250